‖ ap'o-cris'i-a'ri-us (-ā'rĭ-ŭs) } (-rĭz), L. -II (-rĭ-ī). [L. apocrisiarius, apocrisarius, fr. Gr. ἀπόκρισις answer, fr. ἀποκρίνεσθαι to answer; ἀπό from + κρινειν to separate.] Lit., one having to do with answers; — formerly applied to various delegatory officials, esp. the representative or secretary of the Pope or a chief see at Constantinople or later at the Carolingian court, called a legate or nuncio after the title apocrisiarius came to be given to a court official holding no commission from the Pope.

A-poc'ry-pha (ă-pŏk'rĭ-fă), n. pl., but often erroneously used as sing. with pl. APOCRYPHAS (-făz). [L. apocryphus apocryphal, Gr. ἀπόκρυφος hidden, spurious, fr. ἀποκρύπτειν to hide; ἀπό from + κρύπτειν to hide] [l. c.] Writings or statements of doubtful authorship or authority. Specif.:
1. Certain writings (see list under OLD TESTAMENT) which are found in the Septuagint version (see SEPTUAGINT), the Greek version of the Old Testament in current use in New Testament times, and are quoted as Scripture by the early Church, and by the Eastern Church of all periods, also by the Western Church, as they were translated in the Itala and in Jerome's version called the Vulgate (see VULGATE). But, as they are not part of the Hebrew Bible, Protestants reject them as inspired sources of doctrine or as reliable history. They were formerly printed between the Testaments in Protestant Bibles and were revised by the Revision Committee. Selections from them are in the Table of Lessons for Holydays in the Churches of the Anglican Communion.
2. A body of other writings to which a fictitious authorship was attributed, including a number belonging to the Old Testament division and others (known as New Testament Apocrypha) produced in the early Church purporting to emanate from apostles and their contemporaries and to be gospels, histories, epistles, and apocalypses similar to those in the canon. These with few exceptions have never had any standing, as they have always been considered spurious. The titles of the more important of these Apocrypha and the nature of their contents are here given:
OLD TESTAMENT APOCRYPHA. — 3 & 4 Maccabees. III. The story of the deliverance of the temple and of Jewish captives from Ptolemy IV. IV. A discourse on the supremacy of Reason. — Book of Jubilees, a midrash on Gen. i.–Ex. xiv., arranged by periods of 49 years, and purporting to have been revealed to Moses in the Mount. — Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, last words of Jacob's sons, each giving a history of himself, a moral discourse, and a prophecy. — Ascension of Isaiah, account of the sawing asunder of Isaiah, with Christian additions. Isaiah's vision of the Seven Heavens. — Apocalypse of Baruch, historical apocalypse from Baruch's time to the Last Days and the reign of Messiah. It includes the Epistle of Baruch. — Book of Enoch, vision of Heaven and Hell, and the Messianic Judgment; Fall of the Angels; Enoch's Journeys through earth and heaven, a treatise on Astronomy; two Visions of the Flood; two historical apocalypses. — Secrets of Enoch, Enoch's journey through the Seven Heavens; God's description to Enoch of the Creation, Fall of the Angels and of Adam; Enoch's Translation, etc. — Sibylline Oracles, a medley of fragmentary poems, Jewish and Christian, in 12 books, containing polemics against polytheism, and visions, etc. — Assumption of Moses, historical apocalypse from the time of Moses to Jehovah's restoration of the theocracy. It mentions dispute over the body of Moses. — Psalms of Solomon, eighteen poems of praise, prayer, lamentation, etc. — Psalm CLI, a psalm of victory, ascribed to David.
NEW TESTAMENT APOCRYPHA. — a. Gospel according to the Hebrews, fragments containing additions to the story and sayings of Jesus. It was used among "Nazarenes" of Syria in Jerome's time. — Logia, a single leaf of a papyrus book found at Oxyrhynchus, containing sayings of Jesus. — Protevangelium of James, story from the Conception of the Virgin to the death of Zacharias. Early history of Mary, and infancy of Jesus. — Gospel of Thomas, story of Christ's childhood, relating miracles, etc. — Gospel of Peter, existing fragment relates the passion and resurrection. Its character is Docetic and anti-Jewish. Shows knowledge of the four canonical Gospels. — Gospel of Nicodemus or Acts of Pilate (ch. i.–xvi. extant), account of passion, resurrection, and descent into hell. — b Epistles Abgarus Letters, a letter of Abgar, king of Edessa, to Christ, asking him to come and live there. Christ's answer, promising to send an apostle. — Paul to the Laodiceans, a short cento of Pauline phrases, based on the hunt in Col iv 16. — Epistle of Barnabas, resembling the Epistle to the Hebrews, but with free allegorical exegesis. — Clement to the Corinthians, letter of a distinguished Roman Christian to the Church of Corinth, to promote harmony and good order. — c Apocalypses Apocalypse of Peter, fragment of a prophecy of Christ, and a vision of the state of the blessed, and the torments of various classes of the condemned. — Shepherd of Hermas, a collection of parables and visions concerning the history and ultimate fate of the Church. — d Teachings. Didachè or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, general ethical teaching, and directions for the conduct of public worship; — an ancient church manual. — Preaching of Peter, some fragments contain warnings against Judaism and polytheism, together with words of Jesus, others give a lament for the denial, and various ethical maxims.
☞ In early times there were various writings bearing the name of some holy man which because of their esoteric contents were hidden from the public and put into the hands only of the inner circle of the sect which used them, whence they were called literally "hidden" or "secret" (books). The sense of "doubtful authorship or authority" arose from the fact that such authorship was falsely attributed.

2. Not canonical. Hence: Of doubtful authority; mythic; fictitious; spurious; false.
The passages . . are, however, in part from apocryphal or fictitious works. Sir G. C. Lewis.
Apocryphal Gospels are uncanonical Gospels: but all uncanonical Gospels are not necessarily apocryphal in the bad meaning which adheres to the word. A Gospel may be neither spurious nor heretical, though it . . . is uncanonical.
J. G. Tasker (Dict. of Bible).

Ap'o-des (ăp'ŏ-dēz), n. pl. [NL. See APOD.] Zoöl. 1. A group of soft-finned, physostomous fishes consisting of the eels and morays, and, in old classifications, also many others having no pelvic fins. (See EEL.) Formerly it was made a division of the Physostomi, but recent classifications raise it to the rank of an order, or even regard it as a subclass composed of several orders. Various characters indicate degeneration or low organization, such as the snakelike body, the shoulder girdle usually separate from the skull, the absence of the mesocoracoid arch and of the pelvic and sometimes the pectoral fins, and of a separate caudal fin in recent forms.

2. Any of several groups of animals; — equiv. nearly or exactly to APODA a, b, or c.

a-pod'o-sis (ā-pŏd'ō-sĭs), n.; L. pl. -SES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. ἀπόδοσις, fr. ἀποδιδόναι to give back; ἀπό from, back again + διδόναι to give.] Gram. The consequent clause or conclusion in a conditional sentence, expressing the result, and thus distinguished from the protasis, or clause which expresses a condition. Thus, in the sentence, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," the former clause is the protasis, and the latter the apodosis. Some use protasis and apodosis of the introductory clause and the concluding clause even when the sentence is not conditional.

ap'o-dy-te'ri-um (ăp'ŏ-dĭ-tē'rĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -RIA (-rĭ-ă). [L., fr. Gr. ἀποδυτήριον, fr. ἀποδύεσθαι to strip one's self.] An undressing room in an ancient Greek or Roman bath or in the palestra.

ap'o-ga-lac'te-um (-gă-lăk'tē-ŭm), n. [NL.; apo- + Gr. γάλα, γάλακτος, milk. Cf. GALAXY.] That point of the hypothetical orbit of the sun (or a star) at which it is most remote from the Milky Way.

a-pog'a-my (ā-pŏg'ā-mĭ), n. [apo- + -gamy.] 1. Evolution. Interbreeding of a segregated group of individuals not having any common character differentiating them from those from which they are segregated.

2. Bot. a The development of buds in place of ovules. b The absence of sexual function; growth of the normal product of fertilization directly from the female sexual organ. Cf. PARTHENOGENESIS.

ap'o-ge'an (ăp'ŏ-jē'ăn), a. Of or connected with the apogee; as, apogean (neap) tides, which occur when the moon has passed her apogee.

ap'o-gee (ăp'ŏ-jē), n. [Gr. ἀπόγαιον, fr. ἀπόγαιος from the earth; ἀπό from + γαῖα, γῆ, earth: cf. F. apogée.] 1. Astron. That point in the orbit of a heavenly body at the greatest distance from the earth; — in the Ptolemaic system (according to which the earth was the center about which the other bodies revolved), said of the sun, moon, and planets, but now properly said only of the moon. Opposed to perigee.

2. Fig.: The farthest or highest point; culmination.

apogeotropic roots, short roots that push upwards above the soil. They are commonly found in certain trees like the mangrove (Rhizophora) and the black mangrove (Avicennia). Being composed of loose cellular tissue, they are supposed to function as aërating roots.

ap'o-ge-ot'ro-pism (ăp'ŏ-jē-ŏt'rō-pĭz'm), n. Bot. State of being apogeotropic; negative geotropism ap'o-jove' (ăp'ŏ-jōv'), n. [apo- + Jove.] Astron. That point in the orbit of each of Jupiter's satellites which is farthest from the planet.

ap'o-laus'tic (ăp'ŏ-lôs'tĭk), a. [Gr. ἀπολαυστικός, fr. ἀπολαύειν to enjoy.] Devoted to enjoyment.

A-pol'li-na'ri-an (ā-pŏl'ĭ-nā'rĭ-ăn), a. [L. Apollinaris.] 1. Pertaining to or like Apollo; done or being in honor of Apollo; as, the Apollinarian games.

2. Of or pertaining to Apollinaris of Laodicea, or his doctrines. See APOLLINARIANISM.

A-pol'li-na'ri-an, n. An adherent of Apollinarianism.

A-pol'li-na'ri-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n. The doctrine that both a divine and a human nature cannot exist in one personality; — so called from its author, Apollinaris the Younger, bishop of Laodicea (d. 390), who argued that identity both with God and man could not be attributed to the nature of Christ, since that would produce two sons of God, one real son and the other by adoption, and that as sin is inherent in humanity the son thus adopted would have sin in him; and therefore that in Christ there was only one nature — the divine Logos occupying the place of the rational soul — but that this single nature had a divine and a human side so perfectly united that the attributes of each could be applied to the other.

A-pol'li-na'ris wa'ter (-rĭs). An effervescing alkaline mineral water used as a table beverage. It is obtained from a spring in Apollinarisburg, near Bonn, Germany.

A-pol'line (ā-pŏl'ĭn; -ĭn), a. [L. Apollineus.] Of or pertaining to Apollo or his worship; as, Apolline choruses.

1. Gr. Relig. One of the most important of the Olympian gods, especially conspicuous as the god of manly youth and beauty, of poetry and music, and of the wisdom of oracles. In his primitive character he was fosterer of herds and flocks, guardian of youth, leader of colonies, and protector of the village and its streets; he was perhaps also a god of vegetation, esp. in the Peloponnesus, where he was associated with Hyacinthus and a part of the Hyacinthia was consecrated to him. The Athenian harvest and expiation festival of Thargelia was also his; and at Delphi, where he was the chief god of the oracle (cf. DIONYSUS), his return from the region of the Hyperboreans was celebrated each spring by the Theophania, while his victory over the Python was commemorated every fourth summer by the Pythia (see the terms italicized). Apollo was also god of healing and of ceremonial purification, but he was the sender as well as stayer of plagues and the giver of sudden death (cf. ASCLEPIUS). As god of music and poetry he is associated with the Muses and was father of Orpheus. Although even in early times a divinity of radiance and light, Phœbus or Phœbus Apollo, it was not till late (with Euripides) that he was definitely identified with the sun god Helios. According to the myth, Apollo was the son of Zeus and Leto, and twin of Artemis. From his birth in Delos he is called the Delian god. His constant attributes are the bow and lyre; the tripod and bays are especially connected with his Pythian worship; the gryphon with his annual journey to the Hyperboreans. In Roman religion, Apollo was the first Greek god to find place; but he was worshiped chiefly as a god of healing, his character as sun god having only a literary vogue. See OLYMPIAN.

2. Sculpture. A representation of Apollo; an Apollo statue.

This type, of which the examples have often been classed together, sometimes rightly, sometimes wrongly, under the name Apollo, is the most characteristic of early Greek art.

E. A. Gardner.

3. Astron. = CASTOR. See STAR.

4. A European alpine butterfly (Parnassius apollo), largely white, with ocellate markings.

Apollo of the Belvedere.

Apollo of the Belvedere (bĕl'vē-dēr'; bĕl'vā-dā'rā), or, popularly, Apollo Belvedere, a statue in the Vatican, found in the 16th century near Porto d' Anzio, on the coast south of Rome. It was long accepted as the typical representative of the god, and the ideally perfect form of man, but is recognized by modern critics as a late Græco-Roman work. Both hands have been restored in modern times, as if the figure were shooting with the bow, but it is thought to have originally held the ægis.

Ap'ol-lo'ni-a (ăp'ŏl-lō'nĭ-ă), n. pl. [Gr. 'Απολλώνεια, 'Απολλώνια.] Gr. Relig. A festival of Apollo celebrated at Delos, with games and musical contests, every year in which the Delia did not occur.

Ap'ol-lo'ni-an (-ăn), a. 1. [Gr. 'Απολλώνιος.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling, Apollo.

2. Of, or named after, Apollonius of Perga (of the 3d century B. C.), a geometer who investigated the conic sections.

A-pol'ly-on (ā-pŏl'ĭ-ŏn; ā-pō-lī'ŏn), n. [Gr. ἀπολλύων destroying, fr. ἀπολλύειν, ἀπόλλυναι, to destroy utterly.] The angel of the bottomless pit, answering to the Hebrew Abaddon (Rev. ix. 11). In "Pilgrim's Progress" he appears as a fiend armed with fiery darts whom Christian overcomes in the Valley of Humiliation.

a-pol'o-get'ic (ā-pŏl'ŏ-jĕt'ĭk) } a. [Gr. ἀπολογητικός, fr.
a-pol'o-get'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } ἀπολογεῖσθαι to speak in defense of; ἀπό from + λόγος speech, λεγειν to say. See LOGIC.] Defending by discourse; said, written, or done in defense or by way of apology; regretfully excusing or acknowledging; as, an apologetic essay. "To speak in a subdued and apologetic tone." Macaulay. — a-pol'o-get'i-cal-ly, adv.

The earliest writings of a theological cast were naturally apologetic. Christian truth was defended against assaults without and within the Christian fold. G. P. Fisher.

a-pol'o-get'ic, n. 1. A formal apology or justification; an apology. "A stately apologetic." R. North.

2. Apologetics.

a-pol'o-get'ics (-ĭks), n. That branch of theology which formally defends, on grounds of reason, the divine origin and authority of Christianity.

a-pol'o-gist (ā-pŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n. [Cf. F. apologiste.] One who makes an apology; one who speaks or writes in defense of a faith, a cause, or an institution, specif., one who argues in defense of Christianity, esp. one of the authors of the early apologies, as Justin Martyr or Tertullian.

a-pol'o-gize (-jīz), v. i.; A-POL'O-GIZED (-jīzd); -GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). 1. To make an apology, or defense. Dr. H. More.

2. To make an apology, or excuse; to make acknowledgment of some fault or offense with expression of regret for it by way of amends; — with for.

The Christians . . were apologized by Pliny. Dr. G. Benson.

a-pol'o-giz'er (-jīz'ẽr), n. One who apologizes.

ap'o-logue (ăp'ŏ-lŏg), n. [L. apologus, Gr. ἀπόλογος; ἀπό from + λόγος speech, λέγειν to speak: cf. F. apologue.] A story or relation of fictitious events intended to convey some moral truth; a moral fable.

Syn. — See FABLE.

a-pol'o-gy (ā-pŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [L. apologia, Gr. ἀπολογία; ἀπό from + λόγος: cf. F. apologie. See APOLOGETIC.] 1. Something said or written in defense or justification of what appears to others wrong, or of what may be liable to disapprobation; justification; as, Tertullian's Apology for Christianity.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: some will think it needs no excuse, and others will receive none. Dryden.

2. An acknowledgment intended as an atonement for some improper or injurious remark or act; an admission to another of a wrong or discourtesy done him, accompanied by an expression of regret.

3. What serves as an excuse for the absence of something; a poor substitute; a makeshift.

Devising apologies for window curtains. Dickens.

4. [cap.] One of the earliest and most famous of Plato's works. It purports to give Socrates's speech in his own defense at the trial in which he was condemned. It is characterized by rare ethical nobility, and of all Plato's works is supposed to be truest to the teachings and spirit of Socrates.

Syn. — Explanation, acknowledgment, justification, vindication. — APOLOGY, EXCUSE. An APOLOGY (as here compared) implies that one has been, at least apparently, in the wrong; it may bring forward palliating circumstances, or tender a frank acknowledgment of error, with an expression of regret, by way of reparation. An apology is in place when one has been guilty of a breach of propriety or decorum; as, "Pardon us the interruption of thy devotion. — My lord, there needs no such apology" (Shak.). An apology may involve humiliation or self-abasement; as, "No nation ever apologizes except on her knees" (Lowell). An EXCUSE implies some neglect of duty which it explains or extenuates; it may be impersonal, whereas an apology is always personal; as, an excuse for absence from a required exercise; "Achilles will not to the field to-morrow. — What's his excuse?" (Shak.). See EXCUSE, PRETENSE.

ap-peal' (ă-pēl'), n. [ME. appel, apel, OF. apel, F. appel, fr. appeler. See APPEAL, v. t.] 1. Law. a A formal accusation of a felony or heinous crime made against a person by another who demands punishment for the private injury rather than for the public offense. Obs. or Hist. The one making the appeal was called the appellor; when a felon appealed an accomplice, the appellor was called an approver. Appeals of treason were abolished before 1400, by 5 Edw. III. c. 9 (1331) and later statutes; and other appeals in 1819, by 59 Geo. III. c. 46, an appeal of murder (Ashford v. Thornton, 1 B. & Ald. 405) having been brought in 1818.
This proceeding (involving a trial by battle, instead of by jury), though leading . . . to the same punishment as if the offender had been indicted, might yet be remitted by the private prosecutor. . . . Prosecutions by this method of appeal were allowed in cases of murder, larceny, rape, arson, and mayhem. Stephen's Comm.
b A proceeding by which a cause is brought from an inferior to a superior court for reëxamination or review and reversal, retrial, or modification; also, the mode of such proceeding or right of taking it. Orig. appeal was used only of such a proceeding in an equity, admiralty, or ecclesiastical court, — the common-law judgment being reviewed by means of a writ of error, which brought up for review only the errors of law of the court below, while on an appeal both law and facts were reviewed. In modern legislation abolishing the distinctions in forms of actions the appeal is generally substituted for the writ of error.
2. A summons to answer to a charge. Dryden.
3. A call upon a person, a faculty of mind, or any kind of authority, for proof or decision in one's favor; reference to another as witness; a call for help or a favor; entreaty.
A kind of appeal to the Deity, the author of wonders. Bacon.
Every milder method is to be tried, before a nation makes an appeal to arms. Kent.
4. A challenge. Obs.

‖ ap'pel' (ă'pĕl'), n. [F., prop., a call.] Fencing. A smart tap or stamp of the foot, orig. as a warning of intent to attack.

ap-pel'lant (ă-pĕl'ănt), a. [L. appellans, p. pr. of appellare: cf. F. appelant. See APPEAL.] Appealing; pert. to an appeal; appellate. "An appellant jurisdiction." Hallam.

ap-pel'lant, n. 1. One who makes an appeal.
2. Specif.: a Law. One who appeals from a judicial decision or decree. b [cap.] Eccl. Hist. One of the French clergy who, in the Jansenist controversy, appealed to a general council against the bull Unigenitus (1713); — opposed to Acceptant, 2.

ap-pel'late (-ăt), a. [L. appellatus, p. p. See APPEAL.]
1. Appealed against. Obs.
2. Pertaining to, or taking cognizance of, appeals; vested with the power to review and affirm, reverse, or modify the judgment or decision of another tribunal, sometimes involving the power to try a matter de novo; as, appellate jurisdiction; appellate court, — distinguished from original, and sometimes from supervisory.

ap'pel-la'tion (ăp'ĕ-lā'shŭn), n. [F., fr. L. appellatio.]
1. Act of appealing; appeal. Obs. Spenser.
2. Act of calling by a name.
3. The word by which a particular person or thing is called and known; name; title; designation.
They must institute some persons under the appellation of magistrates. Hume.
Syn. — See NAME.

ap-pel'la-tive (ă-pĕl'ă-tĭv), n. [L. appellativum, sc. nomen.] 1. A common name or noun, in distinction from a proper name or noun. See COMMON NOUN.
2. An appellation or title, a descriptive name.
God has chosen it for one of his appellatives to be the Defender of them. Jer Taylor

ap-pel'la-tive, a. [L. appellativus, fr. appellare: cf F. appellatif.] 1. Of or pert. to a common name; serving as a distinctive denomination; denominative; naming.
2. Gram. Common, as opposed to proper; denominative of a class.

ap'pel-lee' (ăp'ĕ-lē'), n. [F. appelé, p. p. See APPEAL.] Law. The person against whom an appeal is taken; the respondent to an appeal; — opposed to appellant, appellor.

ap-pel'lor (ă-pĕl'ôr; ăp'ĕ-lôr'), n. [OF. apeleor.] Law. One who appeals; one who appeals another of a crime.
☞ This word is rarely or never used for the plaintiff in appeal from a lower court, who is called the appellant.

ap-pend' (ă-pĕnd'), v. t.; AP-PEND'ED; AP-PEND'ING. [L. appendere or F. appendre. cf. ME. appenden, apenden, to belong, OF. apendre, F. appendre, fr. L. appendēre, to hang to, appendĕre, v. t., to hang to; ad + pendēre, v. i., to hang, pendĕre, v. t., to hang. See PENDANT.]
1. To hang or attach to, as by a string, so that the thing is suspended, as, a seal appended to a record; the inscription was appended to the column.
2. To add as an accessory; to annex; as, notes appended to this chapter.
A further purpose appended to the primary one. I. Taylor.
Syn. — Affix, annex, subjoin. See ATTACH.

ap-pend'age (ă-pĕn'dĭj), n. 1. Something appended to, or accompanying, a principal or greater thing, though not necessary to it, as a portico to a house; an appurtenance.
Modesty is the appendage of sobriety. Jer. Taylor.
2 Biol. A subordinate or subsidiary part or organ; an external organ or limb; esp., a limb of an articulate animal.
Antennæ and other appendages used for feeling. Carpenter.
Syn. — APPENDAGE, APPURTENANCE, ACCESSORY, ADJUNCT agree in referring to something regarded as additional, and at the same time as subsidiary, to another object (cf. APPENDIX). APPENDAGE implies a certain closeness of attachment or connection, and stresses, sometimes even to mild contempt, the idea of subordination; as, the caudal appendage; the smaller borough is a mere appendage of the larger. APPURTENANCE usually implies possession of the subsidiary by the principal object; as, "The bed itself with all appurtenances of palliasse, mattresses, etc." (Barham). An ACCESSORY, as here compared (see ABETTOR), may be merely an accompaniment; more frequently it implies some contribution, however secondary, to a general effect. ADJUNCT suggests the association of principal and subordinate, often in service or office; as, an adjunct professor. Cf. ATTACH, JOIN.
Those graceful and useless appendages, called Directors. Scott.
One of the subordinate figures in discord with the general tone of the incident — seeming just accessories, and no more. Scott.
Those elements that only began to show themselves timidly, as adjuncts, in the novels of Walter Scott, have usurped ever more and more of the canvas. Stevenson.

2. State or quality of being appendant.

ap-pend'an-cy (-dăn-sĭ), n. Quality or state of being appendant.

ap-pend'ant (-dănt), a. [F. appendant, p. pr. of appendre. See APPEND, v. t.] 1. Hanging; annexed; adjunct; concomitant; as, a seal appendant to a paper.
As they have transmitted the benefit to us, it is but reasonable we should suffer the appendant calamity. Jer. Taylor.
2. Law. Annexed or belonging as a right; — said specif., in Eng. Law, of certain ancient immemorial rights in land, as an advowson, common, etc., which are annexed to the land of the persons claiming them. Unlike rights appurtenant or in gross, rights appendant cannot now be created.
At a later time [than Bracton's day] our law definitely laid down the rule that the freehold tenant of a manor is entitled to "common appendant," which is defined as "the right which every freehold tenant of a manor possesses, to depasture his commonable cattle, levant and couchant, on his freehold tenement sufficiently arable, in the waste of the manor." To entitle himself to this right, a man has merely to show that he is a freehold tenant of the manor. Pollock & Mait.

ap-pend'ant, n. 1. Anything attached as incidental or subordinate to another; adjunct; specif., a dependency.
2. Law. An appendant inheritance or right.

ap'pen-dec'to-my (ăp'ĕn-dĕk'tŏ-mĭ) } n. [appendix ap-pend'i-cec'to-my (ă-pĕn'dĭ-sĕk'tŏ-mĭ) } + -ectomy.] Surg. Excision of the vermiform appendix.

ap'pen-di'cial (ăp'ĕn-dĭsh'ăl), a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the vermiform appendix.

ap-pen'di-ci'tis (ă-pĕn'dĭ-sī'tĭs), n. [NL. See APPENDIX; -ITIS.] Med. Inflammation of the vermiform appendix. Appendicitis, which may be either acute or chronic, occurs in the following pathological varieties: catarrhal (the mildest form), ulcerative, perforative, and gangrenous (the gravest form). Chronic appendicitis with frequent acute attacks is called relapsing appendicitis; with occasional acute attacks after intervals of apparently perfect health, recurrent appendicitis. Appendicitis obliterans is a form of chronic appendicitis in which there is a progressive obliteration of the lumen. Fulminating appendicitis is marked by sudden onset and rapid and usually fatal development.

ap'pen-dic'u-lar (ăp'ĕn-dĭk'ŭ-lăr), a. Of or relating to an appendicle, or appendage, specif.: a Anat. & Zoöl. Of or pertaining to an appendage or limb; as, the appendicular skeleton, the skeleton of the limbs, as opposed to the axial skeleton. b Med. Pertaining to the vermiform appendix; as, appendicular inflammation.

Ap'pen-dic'u-la'ri-a (-lā'rĭ-ă), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A genus of small free-swimming pelagic Tunicata, shaped somewhat like a tadpole and remarkable for resemblances to the larvæ of other Tunicata. It is the type of a family, Ap'pen-dic'u-la-ri'-dæ (-lă-rĭ'ĭ-dē), of the order Larvacea.

ap'pen-dic'u-la'ri-an (-lā'rĭ-ăn), a. Zoöl. Of or pert. to the Larvacea (see APPENDICULARIA). — n. One of the Larvacea.

2. Matter added to a book but not necessarily essential to its completeness, as a body of explanatory notes, a table of statistics, etc.

3. Anat & Zool. An outgrowth; a process; appendage. Specif., Anat, the vermiform appendix (which see).

Syn. — APPENDIX, ADDENDUM, SUPPLEMENT come into comparison as applied to additional matter subjoined to a book (cf. APPENDAGE). APPENDIX is used of appended material which contributes, by way of illustration, amplification, citation of documents, etc., to the effectiveness of a treatment which is still relatively complete in itself. As opposed to appendix, addendum and supplement agree in implying that the additional matter is essential to completeness of treatment, but differ in that ADDENDUM suggests greater brevity and is frequently used of material added to supply the omissions of composition, while SUPPLEMENT implies larger compass, and is often applied to material added after some lapse of time, often as a separate publication, to embody the results of later information or research. Cf. ATTACH, AFFIX.

ap/per-ceive/ (ăp/ẽr-sēv/), v. t.; AP/PER-CEIVED/ (-sēvd/); AP/PER-CEIV/ING. [F. apercevoir, fr. L. ad + percipere, perceptum, to perceive. See PERCEIVE.] 1. To perceive; to comprehend. Chaucer.

2. Psychol. Broadly, to bring into clear attention; specif., to interpret or explain (new ideas) in terms of the old; to recognize, identify, interpret, subsume, or reject (an idea); hence, to adjust (new knowledge) to what is already known.

ap/per-cep/tion (-sĕp/shŭn), n. [ap- + perception: cf. F. apperception.] Psychol. a Perception involving self-consciousness. b Cognition through the relating of new ideas to familiar ideas. Apperception is distinguished from perception as being the internal act, or rather reaction, by which the mind adjusts the object present in perception to its knowledge already stored up in experience "In perception we have an object presented to our senses, but in apperception we identify the object or those features of it which were familiar to us before; we recognize it, explain it, or interpret the new by our previous knowledge We classify it under various general classes; in identifying it we perceive also the differences from what we have seen before and thus arrive at new varieties of the class." This conception originates with Leibnitz, who holds that sense perception is not the origin of all our knowledge. The French apercevoir signifies "to perceive" and s'apercevoir "to notice with attention, or with consciousness," that is to say, with reflection, analysis, inference. Leibnitz calls apperception "a knowledge of causes." The mind sees things and events by sense perception and notes their presuppositions by apperception The mind is entirely self-active (spontaneous) in apperception, but partly passive in sense perception. Apperception brings with it a reflection upon the interior nature of the soul. The object of reflection acts (actes réflexifs), he explains, is "the ego, substance, self-existence (monade), soul, spirit, immaterial things, truths" This is what Leibnitz means by the word consciousness (Fr conscience) — it implies apperception and the use of a knowing (by presuppositions) of the necessary conditions of existence for the world of perception. (Cf. Lange, Amer. tr., pp. 248, 249.) We know the mind itself by apperception; this furnishes us such ideas as the me, being, cause, quantity, quality, substance, and such categories as enable us to unite and interpret the "little perceptions" (or fragments of knowledge) furnished by the senses (K. Lange, Amer. tr., pp 248, 249). Thus the categories of the mind are apperceived by the mind itself, and by their aid are apperceived the contents of sense perception, and there grows in the mind a body of knowledge by which the work of apperceiving new percepts goes on. Kant speaks of the transcendental unity of apperception, presenting anew the doctrine of Leibnitz as a central basis of his "Analytic." He shows the ego as the transcendental unity of consciousness and of all acts of judgment (see KANTIAN PHILOSOPHY) Herbart made a fruitful application of apperception to education; taking his start from Kant and Leibnitz and adopting a mechanical phraseology, he describes the process of recognition or explanation of the new by the old as a collision of the external ideas received through the senses and internal ideas stored through past experience in which the latter adjusts to itself the former (ideas by modifications and omissions) "by fusion or melting together the new with the old"). It is to Herbart that we owe the present importance of the technical term apperception both in education and in physiological psychology. Wundt, sometimes counted a disciple of Herbart, differs from him in his use of the mechanical interpretations of apperception. The final portion (parts IV. and V.) of Wundt's "Physiological Psychology" is devoted to apperception and the will, two forms of the mind's self-activity (or spontaneity) that react upon the external world given us in sense perception; the former, apperception, adding to sense ideas their necessary presuppositions of causality, unity, and other essential relations; and adding, besides this a priori contribution, also the stored-up results of previous experience, thereby guiding present perception and modifying its results (see (b) quoted below). Attention is defined by him as the corporeal ("subjective") process connected with apperception (see (a) below) and relates "only to the muscle sensations of effort and strain and other bodily feelings that accompany it (apperception)"; apperception on the other hand includes "the objective change set up in the concepts or ideas perceived," called objective here because relating to the causes of the objects and events perceived. Causal relations, however, are not perceived by our senses, but inferred only by apperception, which has been shown to be an activity of the self or subject, and hence a self-activity (or spontaneity) of the ego (see quotations (a) (c) (d) (e) below). Wundt calls the activity of apperception and the will psychical causality, as opposed to the causality in nature. W. T. Harris.

(a) "Apperception denotes the objective change set up in our ideas, while attention denotes the subjective sensations and feelings which accompany this objective change or prepare the way for it" (Hum. and An. Psy., Wundt, Eng tr. C. & T.). (b) "Apperception includes perception which goes on at the same time while apperception brings to bear on it (perception) the entire previous history of experience and therewith reacts on present perception so as to alter or modify it." (c) "Attention contains muscle sensations and feelings that accompany an increased clearness of ideas. . . . The sensations and feelings constituting attention are not accidentally and equivocally associated with the apperceived idea, but are related to it so that the feelings of effort or strain and the other feelings [constituting attention] that precede or accompany them are governed wholly by the nature of the apperceived idea; it it changes they change also." (d) "The phenomena of apperception are such as coincide completely with action proceeding from an acting subject (or self)." (e) "The sensations and feelings which accompany the act of apperception give us the conception of an acting subject and are the sole source of our idea of an acting subject . . . This notion of the permanent subject is expressed in language by the personal pronoun, I, ego, and thus the concept of the self arises" (op. cit. 254–256).

ap/per-cep/tive (ăp/ẽr-sĕp/tĭv), a. Psychol. Relating to, or involved in, apperception.

ap/per-cip/i-ent (-sĭp/ĭ-ĕnt), n. [ap- = ad- + L. percipiens, -entis, p. pr. of percipere to perceive.] Psychol. That which apperceives. — ap/per-cip/i-ent, a.

ap/per-tain/ (ăp/ẽr-tān/), v. i.; AP/PER-TAINED/ (-tānd/); AP/PER-TAIN/ING. [ME. apperteinen, apertenen, OF. apartenir, F. appartenir, fr. F. appréhender. See PREHENSILE, GET; cf. APPRISE.] 1. To take or seize; to take hold of. Archaic.

We have two hands to apprehend it. Jer. Taylor.

2. Hence: To take or seize (a person) by criminal process; to arrest. See ARREST.

3. To learn. Obs.

4. To become conscious or sensible of; to perceive as, or understand to be, existing or present; as, he apprehends danger in every sound.

5. To lay hold of with the understanding; to recognize the meaning of; hence, to interpret the significance of; to view or consider as being of a certain import or character.

This suspicion of Earl Reimund . . . soon got a sting in the king's head, and he violently apprehended it. Fuller.

The eternal laws, such as the heroic age apprehended them. Gladstone.

6. To anticipate; esp., to anticipate with anxiety, dread, or fear; to fear.

O, let my lady apprehend no fear. Shak.

Syn. — Perceive, conceive, understand, grasp, imagine. — APPREHEND, COMPREHEND. To APPREHEND is to lay hold of or catch the meaning of something; as, "apprehension is simply an intelligent acceptance of the idea, or of the fact which a proposition enunciates" (J. H. Newman). To COMPREHEND is to embrace or understand a thing in all its compass and extent; as, "God hath not made a creature that can comprehend him" (Sir T. Browne). One apprehends much that one does not comprehend; as, one may apprehend without comprehending the idea of infinity. See PERCEIVE, CONCEIVE.

Able to compass and comprehend the greatest matters, and nevertheless to touch and apprehend the least. Bacon.

ap'pre-hend', v. i. 1. To think, believe, or be of opinion; to understand; suppose.

ap'pre-hen'sion (ăp'rē-hĕn'shŭn), n. [L. apprehensio: cf. F. appréhension. See APPREHEND.] 1. Act of apprehending: a Seizure; as, the hand is an organ of apprehension. Sir T. Browne. b Seizing or taking by legal, esp. criminal, process; arrest; as, the felon, after his apprehension, escaped. Cf. ARREST. c Grasping with the intellect; the contemplation of things, without affirming, denying, or passing any judgment; intellection; perception.

d Anticipation, mostly of things unfavorable; distrust or fear at the prospect of future evil.

Claudius was in no small apprehension for his own life Addison.

2. Metaph. Act of mentally grasping, or bringing some object before the mind; the simplest form of understanding; — opposed to comprehension, which is a complex mental act. Apprehension has also been used for knowledge necessarily true; hence, by Scholastics, for cognition of the idea of the essence of a thing. Kant used it for the mental act which gives perceptions temporal and spatial form.

3. Opinion; conception; sentiment; idea; as, in our apprehension, the facts prove the issue.

To be false, and to be thought false, is all one in respect of men, who act not according to truth, but apprehension. South.

4. The faculty by which ideas are conceived; understanding; as, a man of dull apprehension.

Syn. — Dread, distrust, suspicion; uneasiness, anxiety, concern, solicitude; presage, premonition. — APPREHENSION, MISGIVING, FOREBODING, PRESENTIMENT. APPREHENSION denotes disquieting anticipation of future evil, usually accompanied by dread; as, "I live in a state of nervous apprehension, like timid folk when burglars are about" (Lowell). MISGIVING (see QUALM) implies such a premonition of evil as saps resolution and confidence; as, "She read on with a pulse which, as each leaf was turned, quickened with misgiving" (T. Hardy). FOREBODING (see FORETELL) implies deeper and more ominous conviction; as, "There was a sadness and constraint about all persons that day, which filled Mr. Esmond with gloomy forebodings, and sad indefinite apprehensions" (Thackeray). PRESENTIMENT suggests an antecedent impression, usually vague, of impending misfortune; as, "The delicious repose of the soul . . . had been shaken into uneasy effort and alarmed with dim presentiment" (G. Eliot). See CARE, FEAR.

ap'pre-hen'sive (ăp'rē-hen'sĭv), a. [Cf. F. appréhensif. See APPREHEND.] 1. Capable of apprehending, or quick to do so; apt; discerning.

It may be pardonable to imagine that a friend, a kind and apprehensive . . friend, is listening to our talk. Hawthorne.

2. Knowing; conscious; cognizant. Rare.

Ar'ab (ăr'ăb), n. [L Arabs, Arabus, Gr. Ἄραψ, Ar. 'Arab: cf. F. Arabe.] 1. A Semite of the race which from the earliest known time has occupied the Arabian peninsula. In ancient usage the term was confined to the Bedouin tribes in the north of the peninsula and east of Palestine; in modern times it is applied not only to the pure Semites of Arabia, but also to their descendants, many of whom are mixed with native races, in northern, eastern, and central Africa, in Madagascar, India, and the Malay Archipelago, and in various parts of Syria and Persia. The Arabs are one of the oldest and purest of the human races, approximating the ideal Semitic type (see SEMITE). It is now known that there were at least two civilized kingdoms in Arabia as early as 1500 B. C. (see MINÆAN, SABÆAN); but up to the time of Mohammed the native tribes were mainly pastoral nomads and marauders, a condition into which they relapsed after the brief era of Saracen supremacy. In the fertile valleys of Yemen, however, the Arab is a good agriculturist. 2. A horse of Arabian breed. 3. = STREET ARAB.

ar'a-besque' (-bĕsk'), n. [F. arabesque, fr It. arabesco, fr. Arabo Arab.] A kind of ornament, or style of ornamentation, either painted, inlaid, or carved in low relief. It consists of a pattern in which plants or fruits, foliage, etc., and often as well figures of men and animals, real or imaginary, are interlaced or put together in fantastic or heraldic devices. It was employed in late Greek and in Roman imperial ornamentation, and appeared, in geometric designs without the animal figures, in Moorish and Arabic decorative art (See MORESQUE.) The arabesques of the Renaissance were founded on Græco-Roman work.

ar'a-besque', a. 1. Arabian. Obs. 2. Relating to, or exhibiting, the style of ornament called arabesque; as, arabesque frescoes.

ar'a-besque', v. t. Usually in p. p., AR'A-BESQUED' (-bĕskt'). To ornament with, or in the style of, arabesques.

Ar'a-bic (ăr'ȧ-bĭk), a. [L. Arabicus: cf. F. Arabique.] 1. Of or pertaining to Arabia or the Arabians. 2. [l. c.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a colorless, transparent, and soluble acid, probably of the formula $(C_6H_{10}O_5)_2{\cdot}H_2O$. It is an important constituent of gum arabic and many other gums. It is a pentosan, yielding arabinose by hydrolysis.

Arabic architecture, Saracenic architecture (see ARCHITECTURE), with special reference to that of the Arab dominions established in Syria and Egypt during the first century after the Hegira (622–722). — A. numerals or figures, the nine digits, 1, 2, 3, etc., and the cipher 0.

Ar'a-bic, n. The language of the Arabs. Arabic is a Semitic language, and is supposed by some scholars to represent most nearly the primitive Semitic speech. The language is divided into many dialects, the classical form being that spoken at Mecca, Mohammed's birthplace, in which the Koran is written. The language possesses an extensive vocabulary, complicated verbal forms, and a literature of which the most important portion dates from A. D. 750 to 1000. The alphabet contains 28 letters, 6 being modern. It was originally the local alphabet of Mecca, but has exterminated all other Semitic scripts, from which it differs greatly in form; and as the dominant alphabet of Africa and Asia it is, next to the Latin, the most important existing alphabet. Its two chief varieties are the Neski, or Neskhi, and the Kufic. See SEMITIC LANGUAGES.

ar'a-bin (ăr'ȧ-bĭn), n. 1. Chem. Arabic acid. 2. Mucilage, esp. that made of gum arabic.

ar'a-bin-ose' (ăr'ȧ-bĭn-ōs'), n. Chem. A sugar of the pentose class, $C_5H_{10}O_5$, known in three optically different modifications. The most important of these is obtained from cherry gum by boiling it with dilute sulphuric acid. Although dextrorotatory, it is usually called l-arabinose. (See L.) Called also pectinose. — ar'a-bin-o'sic (-ō'sĭk), a.

A-ra'lu (ä-rä'lōō), n Babylon. Myth. The abode of the dead, pictured as a vast and gloomy cavern in the midst of the earth, surrounded with seven walls, and ruled over by Nergal and his malignant consort Allatu with their attendant demons. Here the dead were supposed to lead a feeble existence with no hope of return to a brighter life.

Ar'a-me'an } os, fr. Heb. Aräm, signifying perhaps Highland, a name given to Syria and Mesopotamia.] Of or pertaining to the Biblical Aram and neighboring countries; Aramaic. See ARAMÆAN, n.

Ar'a-mæ'an } n. 1. A Semite of the branch occupying Ar'a-me'an } the Biblical Aram and neighboring territories. Anciently they monopolized much of the inland trade.

Ethnical terms were generalized, so that Western seafaring men and merchants came to be known as "Phœnicians" or "Canaanites," inland traders and travelers as "Aramæans," and . . . learned men and astrologers as "Chaldæans"

Dict. of Bible (Hastings).

2. In a more general sense, a Semite of the northern branch, including the Assyrians, Babylonians, Phœnicians, Hebrews, and Canaanites, as well as the Aramæans proper. The term has also been used, very broadly, to include all the Hamitic, Semitic, and related peoples. 3. Aramæan speech. See SEMITIC LANGUAGES.

Aramæan, or Aramaic, alphabet, an extinct Semitic alphabet, dating from the 7th century B. C. It was for several centuries the commercial alphabet of Asia, and was the parent of the chief literary Semitic alphabets, — Syriac, Hebrew, and Arabic.

Ar'a-ma'ic (ăr'ȧ-mā'ĭk), a. [See ARAMÆAN, a.] Of or pertaining to Aram, esp., designating or pertaining to, or being in, the language called Aramaic.

Aramaic versions (of the Bible). See VERSION.

Ar'a-ma'ic, n. A group of Semitic languages and dialects of which the most important are the Syriac, Biblical and Palestinian Aramaic, and Samaritan. Through trade and other factors Aramaic in one form or the other spread through the Euphrates Valley, Mesopotamia, and Palestine, and became a lingua franca among Semitic peoples. The tongue spoken by Jesus was Aramaic. See SEMITIC LANGUAGES.

Ar'a-ma'ism (-ĭz'm), n. Aramæan culture and influence; also, an Aramaic idiom or peculiarity.

The vitality of Aramaism is attested by the fact that, while the popular dialects of Syria and Mesopotamia soon yielded to Arabic after the establishment of Islam in the 7th century A. D., Syriac, the principal East Aramaic dialect, flourished as a literary language till the 15th century, long after all traces of Aramæan political influence had completely disappeared.

ar'bi-trate (ar'bĭ-trāt), v. t.; ar'bi-trat'ed (-trāt'ĕd); ar'bi-trat'ing (-ĭng). [L. arbitratus, p. p. of arbitrari to be a hearer or beholder of something, to make a decision, to give judgment, fr. arbiter. See ARBITER.] 1. To hear and decide as arbiter or arbitrator; as, to choose men to arbitrate a disputed case; hence, to decide or determine.

There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate. Shak.

2. To submit, or refer for decision, to arbitration.

3. Com. To determine or fix by arbitration of exchange.

ar'bi-trate, v. i. 1. To decide; to determine Shak.

2. To act as arbitrator or judge; as, to arbitrate upon several reports; to arbitrate between parties to a suit.

ar'bi-tra'tion (-trā'shŭn), n. [F. arbitration, L. arbitratio.] Act of arbitrating; esp., the hearing and determination of a cause between parties in controversy by a person or persons chosen by the parties, or appointed under statutory authority, instead of by the judicial tribunal provided by law; the hearing and determination of a matter of dispute by an arbiter or arbitrator. The matter may be submitted by an agreement, usually called a submission, to one arbitrator, or to two, who are to choose a third called an umpire. The decision given is called an award. At common law arbitration is entirely voluntary, and a submission to arbitration is revocable by either party, or avoided by his death, before the award is duly made. Now, in Great Britain and many of the United States, various statutes have been passed providing for compulsory arbitration in certain cases, and for the appointment of the arbitrator by the court in case of the failure of the parties to agree upon one. These statutes generally make a submission in writing irrevocable unless otherwise expressed in the writing, and make the award conclusive, subject only to petition to the court to set it aside. The scope and method of arbitration are not bound by the rigid rules of legal procedure, which are binding upon a judicial tribunal, whether acting by itself or by a referee, in an amicable suit, or otherwise. See AWARD, ARBITRATOR, CONCILIATION.

Arbitration is a substitution, by consent of parties, of another tribunal for those provided by the ordinary processes of law. 132 Mass. 419.

arbitration of exchange. a The operation of determining by calculation the differences in money values or the rates of exchange between three or more countries or currencies, for the purpose of a transaction between two through the other or others as intermediaries, called simple arbitration when three places are concerned, and compound arbitration when more than three. b A transaction consisting in buying and selling bills, currency, credit, etc., of three or more countries so as to make a profit on the different rates of exchange between them, as where a banker sells a bill of exchange on London and pays it by forwarding to London a bill of equal amount on Berlin, purchased by him at a lower rate. Cf. ARBITRAGE.

ar'bi-tra'tion-al (ar'bĭ-trā'shŭn-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to arbitration.

ar'bi-tra-tive (ar'bĭ-trā-tĭv), a. Of or pertaining to arbitration, relating to or designating a tribunal for arbitration.

ar'bi-tra'tor (ăr'bĭ-trā'tẽr), n. [L., fr. arbitrari: cf. F. arbitrateur] 1. A person, or one of two or more persons, chosen by parties who have a controversy, to settle their differences, an arbiter. See ARBITRATION.

2. One with absolute power of deciding. = ARBITER, 2.

ar'bu-tus (är'bū-tŭs; är-bū'tŭs; the first is the correct Latin accentuation, but the second is now preferred by many for sense 2), n. [L., the strawberry tree.] 1. Bot. [cap.] A genus of ericaceous shrubs or trees, of southern Europe and western North America. They have small campanulate flowers with a superior ovary; the fruit is a many-seeded scarlet berry. The European A. unedo is the strawberry tree, and A. menziesii of California and Oregon is the madroña. Also [l. c.], a tree of this genus.

2. Short for trailing arbutus, a well-known trailing ericaceous plant (Epigæa repens) of the United States, having oblong, hairy leaves and fragrant pink or white flowers with a 4-parted, salver-shaped corolla. It grows as far north as Canada and as far south as Florida, but is especially abundant in New England and the Middle Atlantic States, growing in sandy or rocky soil shaded by woods, and blossoming in early spring. It is not closely related to the arbutus shrub or tree (def. 1). Called also Mayflower, esp. in New England, and ground laurel, esp. in the Southern States.

arc (ärk), n. [F. arc, L. arcus bow, arc. Cf. ARCH, n., ARCHER, ARROW.] 1. Geom. A portion of a curved line; as, the arc of a circle or an ellipse.

arc sin x, arc cos x, arc tan x, etc, signify respectively an angle whose sine, cosine, tangent, etc., is x. In American and English books the symbols sin⁻¹x, cos⁻¹x, tan⁻¹x, etc., are more usual.

2. An object having an arclike curvature; as, the colored arc (the rainbow).

3. An arch. Obs.

Statues and trophies, and triumphal arcs. Milton.

4. Astron. The apparent arc described, above or below the horizon, by the sun or other celestial body. A star's diurnal arc is the arc it describes from rising to setting.

5. Elec. A sustained luminous glow sometimes having the appearance of a bow or arc of light (whence the name) that is formed under certain conditions when a break is made in an electric circuit. The points between which the arc is formed may be of metal or, as in the ordinary arc light, of carbon. The E. M. F. must be sufficient to overcome the contact resistance between the terminals and the intervening layer of gas, and the current sufficient to heat the gas and maintain it in incandescence. This E. M. F. is about 40 volts in the open direct-current carbon arc, about 85 per cent of the light of which comes from the positive carbon, 10 per cent from the negative carbon, and only 5 per cent from the arc itself. There is usually an automatic arrangement for keeping the points at the proper distance from each other, as in the various types of arc lamp. Arc lamps may be operated by a continuous current, in which case the positive carbon attains the highest temperature (about 3600° C.). It becomes crater-shaped and the negative carbon pointed. With an alternating current the ends of the carbons remain nearly flat and they are nearly of the same temperature. To prevent rapid consumption of the carbons the arc is often inclosed so as to limit the supply of oxygen. In the so-called flaming arc, salts of various metals, such as calcium, potassium, cerium, titanium, etc., are introduced. Their vapors have spectra of great luminous intensity. In lamps of this type the light comes chiefly from the arc itself, and the total brightness is several times that of a carbon arc light of the same energy.

arc of action, Mech., in gearing, the arc made up of the arcs of approach and recess, corresponding to the angle of action. This should be longer than the pitch on each wheel, so that at least two pairs of teeth are engaged at the same time. — a. of approach. Mech. See ANGLE OF APPROACH. — a. of recess. Mech. See ANGLE OF RECESS. — a. of vision, Astron., the arc that measures the least distance from the sun at which, when the sun is below the horizon, a star or planet emerging from its rays becomes visible.

arch (arch), n. [F. arche, fr. LL. arca (see ARK), confused with arcus (cf. ARC).] 1. Geom. Any part of a curve; an arc. Obs. or R.

2. Arch. A structural member, usually curved and made up of separate wedge-shaped solids (voussoirs), with their joints at right angles to the curve. It is used to support the wall or other weight above an opening or as an ornamental feature in decorative work. Scientifically, the arch is a means of spanning an opening by resolving vertical pressure into horizontal or diagonal thrust. Arches are classified generally according to their structural properties, or their uses in a particular position of a building or style of architecture; as, skew, discharging, Gothic, etc. They are more specifically named according to their intrados curves; as, elliptical, lancet, three-centered, etc.

Arches: 1 Primitive; 2 Segmental; 3 Round; 4 Horseshoe; 5 Ogee; 6 Equilateral Pointed and Stilted; 7 Lancet; 8 Flat; 9 Three-centered or "Basket-handle;" 10 Four-centered or "Tudor;" 11 Shouldered; 12 Trefoil; 13 Rampant.

3. Any place covered by an arch; an archway.

4. Any curve in the form of an arch; as, the arch of the aorta. "Colors of the showery arch." Milton.

Historic Styles.	Types and Examples.	Structural Features.
EGYPTIAN		Majesty, solidity, colossal size.
First & Second Dynasties: B. C. 3400-2980.	Tombs, Abydos	Brick-lined rectangular pit, with stairway and surrounding chambers, roofed with timbers and sand heap. Beginning of stone temples.
Middle Kingdom: B. C. 2160-1788	Tombs, Beni-Hassan	Jointed masonry; excellent flat reliefs.
Empire: B. C. 1580-about 1150 (Grand age of Egyptian architecture).	Great temples, Karnak Grotto temples, Abu-Simbel Peripteral temples	Forecourt, colonnaded hall, and series of chambers; architraves carried by columns with capitals patterned on palm foliage, lotus, or clustered papyrus (cf. fig. 4); colored reliefs. Hewn in cliffs; open porticoes with rock-cut columns, some of proto-Doric type. See PROTO-DORIC, Illust. Pylons, colonnaded forecourts, hypostyle hall, and sanctuary (figs. 1 & 2); developed clerestory lighting; thick sloping walls, square-headed openings, flat roofs; low-relief sculptures and hieroglyphs brilliantly colored.
GREEK		Simplicity, symmetry, monumental repose Column and lintel construction, chiefly in finely dressed marble.
Archaic: B. C. 650-500.	Doric temples, Temples at Selinus and Agrigentum.	Long and narrow temples of developed Greek type rectangular colonnade surrounding shrine cell. Earliest columns of wood, gradually replaced by stone; wooden roofs.
Transition: B. C. 500-460	Temple at Ægina. " of Zeus, Olympia. Temples at Pæstum.	Columns with much taper and spreading capitals; material generally soft stone covered with stucco. Archaic but effective sculpture in metopes and pediments. All parts of exterior painted in bright colors (cf. fig. 2), terra cotta used for gutters and roof ornaments.
Alexandrian: B. C. 400-300.	Propylæa, stoas, gymnasia, stadia, hippodromes, theaters	See under the terms.
Decadent: B. C. 300-100.	Temple of Artemis, at Ephesus. Mausoleum at Halicarnassus Temples at Samothrace. Buildings at Pergamon.	Sculpture probably more decorative; polychromy less common. Beginning of Corinthian style (fig 4). Doric style much altered and without charm. Under Roman dominion Corinthian the chief style; Ionic enriched but less tasteful. Splendid and varied sculpture
ROMAN		Practical civic building; utility and imposing appearance. Arched construction, combined with the Greek orders (fig. 4).
Etruscan: Prevailed until nearly B. C. 100	Walls, Gate at Perugia Tombs Temples, Jupiter Capitolinus Sewers, Cloaca Maxima	Masonry Cyclopean, polygonal, and regularly coursed; true arches. Those above ground with cylindrical towers and tumuli Cella divided into narrow chambers; wooden roof; portico with stone columns. Barrel vaults of brick, peperino, etc.
Greek: Became dominant about B. C. 100	Temples: a rectangular b circular, T. of Vesta	Commonly pseudo-peripteral with deep front colonnade, and raised on a podium (cf fig 2); steps at portico ends only, and inclosed by wing walls Greek orders modified, and Tuscan and Composite added. See ORDER Circular cella with peristyle of Corinthian columns.
Imperial: Until about A. D. 330	Temples, as preceding, Venus and Rome, Maison Carrée (fig. 2), Pantheon (3) Fora; thermæ, Diocletian; basilicas, B. of Constantine; memorial arches and columns, palaces and villas; theaters; amphitheaters, Colosseum	Cella sometimes roofed with barrel vault; magnificent detail. Elaborate combinations of structures, grouped over extended areas Massive building with small stones in strong mortar, afterwards sheathed with stucco, marble, and other materials. Rich but unstructural interior decoration. See BASILICA, 1; FORUM, 1, MEMORIAL ARCH
EARLY CHRISTIAN		Large interiors for public worship.
Western: From about A. D. 350	Churches, Santa Maria Maggiore, St. Paul beyond the Walls. Baptisteries and tombs, Sta. Costanza	Roman basilican model with nave, terminal apse, and side aisles (figs. 1 & 2; also fig 1 under ROMAN, above); large plain buildings, with brick walls and wooden truss roofs. Interior mosaics and painting. See BASILICA, 2.
Byzantine: Became established about 500	As preceding, St Sophia, Constantinople (fig. 3); St. Mark's, Venice.	Circular or polygonal plan Plans have typically a central dome, brought over a square space by means of pendentives; walls commonly of brick; marble and mosaic incrustation. See BYZANTINE ARCHITECTURE.
SARACENIC Arabic, Moorish, etc.: Beginning about 700.	Mosques, Cordoba, Damascus Alcazars, Alhambra	See the nouns, and SARACENIC ARCHITECTURE, MINARET, TAJ MAHAL Earliest general use of pointed arch; very elaborate surface decoration, much of it in color.
ROMANESQUE Beginning about 1000	Castles, Kenilworth; Churches, esp monastic, cloisters, Sant' Ambrogio, Milan	Massive stone construction; development of stone vaults; round-arched openings; molded and carved jambs and archivolts; windows small; effects of somber dignity. See ROMANESQUE ARCHITECTURE; CASTLE, 2; CLOISTER, 3.
Italian	S. Zeno, Verona; S Miniato, Florence; Duomo, Pisa (fig. 1)	Lombard exteriors simple and flat, with arcades, pilasters, or gabled porches (fig. 2); Tuscan roofs with timber ceilings; wall arcades; marbles in white and colored bands.
French:	Notre Dame du Port, Clermont	Heavy walls of rubble faced with stone. Imposing west fronts (fig. 3), elaborate external effects.
English, "Norman:"	Durham (fig. 4)	Wooden roofs, hence higher clerestory walls and larger windows; square towers, esp. at crossing.
German, "Rhenish:"	Cathedral at Speyer (Spires).
Spanish:	Church of Holy Apostles, Cologne (fig 5) Santiago de Compostela	Externally picturesque with turrets and arcading. Dome or cupola at crossing of nave and transept; varied façades.
GOTHIC		Strains brought upon isolated points and balanced; hence walls become less important than windows, esp. with development of stained glass. Chief problem the inclosing of large, unobstructed interiors. Ribbed vaulting; pointed arches; vertical lines; effects of vastness, complexity, and mystery. See GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE; CATHEDRAL, 1; VAULT, 1.
(1) West Europe, 1160-1530: —	Cathedrals, Amiens (figs. 1 & 2); college halls and chapels, Christ Church, Oxford; town and guild halls, Cloth Hall, Louvain; hospitals, etc.
Early: —
French: 1160-1275.	Notre Dame, and Sainte Chapelle, Paris; Chartres.	Simple and vigorous design and detail, sculptured ornament of conventionalized foliage of small plants (fig. 3); plate tracery, narrow windows coupled under pointed arches; spires rarely completed See NOTRE DAME, Illust.
English, "Lancet:" 1180-1280.	Salisbury	Lancet-shaped windows without mullions (fig. 4); multiplicity of fine moldings in pier arches.
German: 1175-1275	Nave of Strassburg Hall church, St. Stephen.	Ribbed vaulting not systematically developed; immense roofs, covering nave and high side aisles in one span. See HALL CHURCH.
Developed: —
French, "Rayonnant:" 1275-1375.	Beauvais; façade of Amiens (fig. 1).	Vaults more perfect, ribs more numerous; greater slenderness and height; decoration more rich than vigorous; naturalistic carving of mature foliage Immense windows; — bar tracery, slender mullions, circles and cusps in window heads Rose windows. French churches relatively short, wide, and high.
English, "Decorated" or "Geometric:" 1280-1380.	Choirs of Exeter and Gloucester	Multiple ribs and liernes. Tracery of more flowing lines (fig. 5). Richly elaborated capitals, moldings, etc. Ornament of a geometric or naturalistic nature. Churches typically long, narrow, and low
German: 1275-1380.	Façade of Strassburg	Ingenuity of technique; great elaboration of detail.
Florid: —
French, "Flamboyant:" 1375-1525.	St. Ouen, St. Maclou, and Cathedral at Rouen.	True rib vaulting tends to give place to solid vaults adorned with ribs in relief; profuse and minute decoration; realistic carving and sculpture; flowing or flamboyant tracery. Spires become groups of pinnacles, with emphasis on vertical instead of sloping lines.
English, "Perpendicular:" 1380-1530.	King's College Chapel; St. George's, Windsor (fig. 6); Henry VII. Chapel, Westminster Abbey.	Roofs less steep; fan vaulting and pendants; four-centered (Tudor) arches; perpendicular mullions with horizontal transoms.
German: 1350-1530	Ulm	Vault ribs fancifully curved; branch tracery; fine spires.
(2) Italy (introduced from France in 13th cent.).	Duomo and Campanile, Florence Monumental tombs, Verona.	Round arches, relatively large wall surfaces with smaller windows, and other Romanesque intermixtures. Climate, classic tradition, and preference for decorated surfaces (mosaic, inlay, and painting) were hostile to Gothic style.
RENAISSANCE	Chiefly palaces, villas, façades	Revival and adaptation of classic Roman types of design. See RENAISSANCE ARCHITECTURE
Early: —	Many small buildings, — gates, chapels, tombs, and fountains	Free, graceful decoration, varied and original compositions.
Italian: 1420-90	Dome of Duomo, Florence (Brunelleschi); S. Andrea, Mantua. Palaces, Riccardi (fig. 1), Strozzi	Dome combined with 3-aisled cruciform plan, sometimes basilican with columnar arcades between aisles. Often solid piers with pilasters, carrying barrel vaults Venetian style shows much Gothic detail. Exteriors stately and fortresslike; courts surrounded with light arcades.
b Francis I., 1520-47 (Most interesting period of French Renaissance).	Beginning of new Louvre; châteaux of Chambord and Chenonceaux.	Varied and graceful composition; beauty of detail. Simple, effective external design; steep gables, dormer windows; slender pilasters, rich moldings
c Advanced or Valois, 1547-89 Henry II. — Henry III.	Tuileries Château d'Anet.	Classic orders adopted; greater formality of treatment; ornament declines in delicacy and richness. Façades flatter and simpler, arches more Roman in type.
English:
a Elizabethan, 1558-1603	Country houses, Burghley; Colleges	Transition style: orders subordinately used; balustrades replace battlements; plaster ceilings; oak wainscoting.
b Jacobean, 1603-25	Same	Classic orders and moldings in modified forms; ornament of ribbons, scrolls, and festoons.
German: 1525-1600.	Castles, Torgau, Heidelberg (part) Town halls, Altenburg	High roofs and dormers, stepped gables, masses and sky lines varied and picturesque. Quaint decoration.
Classic: —		Solid blocks without courts; adorned with towers and spires.
Italian: 1490-1550.	Memorial chapels; Cancellaria palace, Rome (Bramante); St. Peter's (fig 2), Rome (Michelangelo); St. Mark's Library, Venice (Sansovino); (Palladio).	Orders general; classic details literally copied; decline in spontaneity and vigor; subordinate features elaborated; increasing use of colossal orders and detail. Best effects in proportioning of stories, in form and distribution of openings, and in dignity and amplitude of internal design; correct formality of exteriors.
French, "Bourbon:" 1589-1715.
a Henry IV. & Louis XIII. 1589-1643.	Luxemburg; extension of Tuileries. Domestic and civic building.	Vigorous design. Country mansions with high roofs, huge dormers, and long, arcaded galleries.
b Louis XIV., 1643-1715 (Great age of Classic in France).	Versailles; completion of Louvre; Hotel des Invalides.	Stately design; exact symmetry; cold and formal effects. Exteriors with superimposed columns and pilasters, usually one order to each story; interiors with wood, papier maché, and stucco decoration, esp. in white and gold.
English Classic: 1625-1723.	Banqueting Hall (fig. 4), Whitehall (Inigo Jones); St. Paul's (Christopher Wren)	Correct and monumental classic, Jones's patterned on Italian, esp. Palladian, models; Wren's influenced chiefly by French design.
German, "Late:" 1600-1675.	Marienkirche, Wolfenbüttel	Decline both in fancy and dignity; broken curves, large scrolls.
Decline: —
Italian Decadenza: 1550-1700	(Bernini); Sta. Agnese, Rome. (Borromini); Best effects as in Santa Maria della Salute, Venice.	Colossal orders; grandiose or picturesque variations of form and detail; broken lines; scroll ornament; many fronts without columns, made rich by fenestration alone. See BAROQUE, 1.
French Rococo: Louis XV., 1715-74.	Church of S. Geneviève (Panthéon), Paris; Theater of Bordeaux
English, Eighteenth Century.	Blenheim (Vanbrugh); St. Mary's Woolnoth (Hawksmoor); St. Martin's in the Fields (Gibbs)	Formal classic exteriors; interiors of palaces and houses fantastically rich; rocaille decoration. See ROCOCO.
German: 1675-1800	Zwinger Palace, Dresden	"Pediment and portico" period. Symmetry and grandiosity. Queen Anne style in domestic architecture. As in France and Italy (fig. 5).

L. arcus a bow.] Zool. & Embryol. The primitive cartilages or structural elements of which an arcocentrous vertebra is formed. There may be two dorsal pairs (basidorsal and interdorsal, the former being anterior) and two ventral pairs (basiventral and interventral), as well as additional elements lying dorsal and ventral to these. In the amniote vertebrates the centra or bodies of the vertebræ are formed by the pairs of interventrals, while the basiventrals are reduced, sometimes forming intervertebral pads, or disappearing altogether The interdorsals are not developed, the basidorsals forming the neural arch. In the lower vertebrates other methods of grouping these components to form the individual vertebræ are found, and some elements may remain through life as distinct pieces.

ar'gen-tite (-tīt), n. [L. argentum silver.] Min. Native silver sulphide, Ag_2S, a sectile mineral of metallic luster and dark lead-gray color, occurring in isometric crystals and in masses, coatings, etc. It is a valuable ore of silver. H., 2–2.5. Sp. gr., 7.20–7.36.

ar'gen-tol (ăr'jĕn-tōl; -tŏl), n. [L. argentum silver + 3d -ol.] Pharm. An organic silver compound derived from quinoline. It is used as an antiseptic.

ar'gen-tom'e-ter (-tŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [argentum + -meter.] Chem. & Photog. An instrument for measuring the amount of silver salt in a solution, as by finding the specific gravity.

ar-gen'tous (ăr-jĕn'tŭs), a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing, silver; — said of a few compounds which contain a higher proportion of silver than the corresponding argentic compounds; as, argentous chloride, Ag_2Cl.

ar'gil (ăr'jĭl), n. [F. argile, L. argilla white clay, Gr. ἄργιλλα, ἀργίλλος, ἄργιλος, argil, ἀργός white.] Clay; esp., potter's clay; also, formerly, alumina.

ar'gil-la'ce-o- (ăr'jĭ-lā'shē-ō-). A combining form for argillaceous.

ar'gil-la'ceous (-shŭs), a. [L. argillaceus.] Of the nature of argil, or clay; of or containing clay; clayey.
argillaceous marine salt, Old Chem., aluminium chloride.

ar'gil-lif'er-ous (-lĭf'ĕr-ŭs), a. [L. argilla white clay + -ferous.] Producing or abounding in argil or clay.

ar'gil-lite (ăr'jĭ-līt), n. [Gr. ἄργιλλος clay + -lite.] Petrog. Argillaceous schist or slate; clay slate; porcellanite. Its color is bluish or blackish gray, sometimes greenish gray, brownish red, etc. — ar'gil-lit'ic (-lĭt'ĭk), a.

ar'gil-lo- (ăr-jĭl'ō-). A combining form for argillous; as in: ar-gil'lo-ar'e-na'ceous, of or containing clay and sand; ar-gil'lo-cal-ca're-ous, of or containing clay and calcareous earth; ar-gil'lo-cal'cite, an argillaceous limestone; ar-gil'lo-fer-ru'gi-nous, of or containing clay and iron; ar-gil'lo-mag-ne'sian, of or containing clay and magnesia or magnesium.

ar'gi-nine (ăr'jĭ-nĭn; -nēn; 184), n. Also -nin. [L. argentum silver + -ine; — so called in allusion to the silver salts which were first discovered.] Physiol. Chem. A crystalline base, $C_6H_{14}O_2N_4$, obtained from certain vegetable tissues, from the decomposition of protamines and proteids, etc., and also prepared synthetically. It is a derivative of guanidine, and yields urea and ornithine on hydrolysis.

Ar'give (ăr'jĭv; -gīv; 277), a. [L. Argivus.] Of or pertaining to the Achæan city of Argos or the surrounding territory of Argolis; hence (after Homer, who so designates the Greeks against Troy, from the prominence of the Argive king Agamemnon), of or pertaining to the Greeks in general. Homer distinguishes from the Achæan Argos of the Peloponnesus, a Pelasgian Argos, by which is meant Thessaly. — n. A Greek of Argos, or, freely, any Greek.

Ar'go (ăr'gō), n.; gen. ARGUS. [L., fr. Gr. 'Αργώ.]
1. Gr. Myth. The fifty-oared ship built of pines from Pelion under the direction of Athena, who gave it oracular power by inserting a piece of the speaking oak of Dodona in its prow. See ARGONAUT.
2. Astron. A large constellation in the southern hemisphere, through which the Milky Way passes, lying principally between Canis Major and the Southern Cross; — called also Argo Navis. In modern astronomy it is generally replaced by its four divisions, Carina (the Keel), Malus (the Mast), Puppis (the Stern), and Vela (the Sails). Another and earlier subdivision, Pyxis (the Nautical Box, or Mariner's Compass), is still recognized by some astronomers.

Dante calls him "The master of those who know." Hegel speaks of him as "one of the richest and most comprehensive geniuses that ever appeared, a man beside whom no age can furnish an equal ; he is of all the ancients the most worthy of study." Aristotle adopts his first principle from Plato (see PLATONISM), namely, that of the self-activity of an intelligent first cause of all. But he rejects Plato's expression self-moved (used by him for self-activity) and substitutes for it unmoved mover, to imply a causality unlimited by space and time and matter (in his "Physics"). On further reflection, in his "Metaphysics," he finds that the unmoved mover is a self-knowing Reason (Νόησις νοήσεως), creative (ποιητικός), and self-contemplating (θεωρεῖν = expressing a knowing of pure ideas elevated above sense perception and mere experience). Plato had all this, but did not use it to explain the world of nature and man. Aristotle takes for his task this work of explanation, and inventories the several orders of being in the world, always attempting to show how a given order of being shows traces of the divine form-giving cause, whether that order belongs to inorganic or to organic being ; whether to plants, animals, or men ; or whether to human institutions, the home, the nation, the making of moral customs, language, logic, rhetoric, poetry, or to science and philosophy. His works that survive contain over a million words in Greek, of which one eighth (.13) go to the treatises on logic ; one tenth (.10) to psychology ; one fifth (.18) to ethics ; one seventh (.14) to metaphysics ; one fourth (.23) to animals and plants ; the remnant to politics, economics, meteorology, rhetoric, poetics, colors, sounds, grammar, the winds, the heavens, the earth, etc Many of the greatest systems of philosophy owe to Aristotle their chief ideas and methods, especially those of the Stoics and Epicureans, the Neo-Platonists, the Gnostics, the Scholastics, Leibnitz, Descartes, Kant, Hegel, and numerous others. Many articles in this dictionary contain paragraphs relating to Aristotle's special theories, as, for example, Mode, Logic, Postpredicaments, Entelechy, Hegelianism, Leibnitzianism, Apperception, Psychology, Physics, Metaphysics, Ethics, Peripateticism, Scholastic Philosophy, Platonism, Socratic, Potentiality, Actuality, Substance, Cause, Idea, Form and Matter, Katharsis, Theoretic Virtues, Nous, Category, Soul (and others). *W. ar'mil-late (-lāt), a. [L. armillatus braceleted.] Ringed as if with bracelets.

arm'ing (ärm'ĭng), n. 1. Act of furnishing with, or taking, arms.

The arming was now universal. Macaulay.

2. The arms or equipment so furnished; specif., heraldic arms.

3. A part or fitting put upon a thing to complete it or fit it for action; as: a The tallow with which a sounding lead is armed. See ARM, v. t., 5 b. b Naut. (1) pl. Red dress cloths formerly hung fore and aft outside of a ship's upper works on holidays. (2) A kind of boarding nettings. c The armature of a magnet.

arming press, Bookbinding, a blocking press; — so called esp. when used for stamping heraldic arms.

Arminian Baptists. See BAPTIST, n.

Ar-min'i-an, n. Eccl. Hist. A follower of Arminius; a believer in Arminianism; — called also a Remonstrant.

Ar-min'i-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n. The Arminian doctrines or tenets. The five articles of this system are: 1. Conditional election and reprobation, in opposition to the absolute predestination taught by Calvin. 2. Universal redemption, or that the atonement was made by Christ for all mankind, though none but believers can be partakers of the benefit. 3. That man, in order to exercise true faith, must be regenerated and renewed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, which is the gift of God. 4. That man may resist divine grace. 5. That man may relapse from a state of grace; in opposition to Calvin's doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. They were condemned by the synod of Dort, 1619, but have been widespread among Protestant denominations. The theology of the Wesleyans of Great Britain and Methodists of America is Arminian. Cf. CALVINISM.

Ar-min'i-an-ize (ăr-mĭn'ĭ-ăn-īz), v. t. & i. To bring or go over to Arminian views or doctrines. — Ar-min'i-an-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n.

ar-mip'o-tent (-tĕnt), a. [L. armipotens; arma arms + potens powerful.] Powerful in arms; mighty in battle.

ar'mi-stice (ăr'mĭ-stĭs), n. [F., fr. NL. armistitium; arma arms + stare, statum (combining form, -stitium), to stand still.] A brief cessation of arms, by convention; a temporary suspension of hostilities, by agreement; a truce. It may be particular, applying only to a section of the theater of war, or general.

An armistice suspends military operations by mutual agreement between the belligerent parties. If its duration is not fixed, the belligerent parties can resume operations at any time, provided always the enemy is warned within the time agreed upon, in accordance with the terms of the armistice. Hague Peace Convention (Art. 36).

arm'let, n. [arm + -let.] 1. A small arm, as of the sea.

2. An arm ring; a bracelet or band for the upper arm; also, a short bandlike sleeve.

3. A piece of armor for the arm.

ar'mor, ar'mour (ăr'mẽr), n. [ME. armure, fr. F. armure, OF. armeire, fr. L. armatura. See ARMATURE.] 1. Defensive arms for the body; any clothing or covering worn to protect one's person in battle. Armor has been generally of metal, although lighter and cheaper substitutes of skins, quilted cloth, horn, hardened leather, etc., have at various times been used. Beginning with the 12th century, the use of the crossbow and the experience of the crusades led to a great development of European armor, which from this time may be roughly classified in four periods: a 1100-1300. Chain mail armor. The mail hauberk with a coif or hood under the close-fitting helmet was the constant feature. In the 13th century its sleeves were lengthened, and mittens and leg coverings added. Later, the joints began to be reënforced with plates. b 1300-1400. Mixed mail and plate armor.

1. Mail Armor, Brass of Sir Roger de Trumpington, 1289. a Tilting Helm; b Mail Coif; c Ailettes; d Hauberk; e Surcoat; f Chausses; g Genouillère; h Spur; i Shield; j Sword.

2. Plate Armor. a Helmet with Bevor; b Gorget of sliding splints; c Epaulière; d Pallette; e Breastplate; f Brassart; g Cubitière: h Skirt of taces; i Tuille; k Gauntlet; l Cuisse; m Genouillère; n Jamb; o Solleret.

The basinet was worn under the huge sugar-loaf helm, with the camail over the neck. In the latter part of the 14th century splinted armor became general, arms and legs were incased in plates, and laminated guards were added for the shoulder and elbow. Mail was commonly worn over the quilted gambeson, and covered in turn with a rich emblazoned surcoat. c 1400-1600. Complete plate armor. The globular basinet was joined by a gorget with the visit. Perfectly fitting steel panoply was made increasingly light and flexible, with graceful ridges and flutings to deflect weapon points. (See Illust., 2.) d After 1600. Decorative armor. Increasing use of gunpowder relegated armor from practical service to jousts. Massiveness and display of chiseled, embossed, and damascened surfaces, often richly engraved and gilt, marked the decadence of armor, which in its later designs became assimilated even to prevalent fashions of dress. Officers and mounted men continued to wear partial armor in war until about 1700; and survivals of it, as in the cuirass and helmet, are still sometimes worn by cavalry.

2. A suit of such covering. Obs.

3. The whole apparatus of war, including offensive as well as defensive arms. The statutes of armor directed what arms every man should provide. Obs. or Hist.

4. Warfare; hostilities. Obs.

5. Steel or iron plating on ships or forts for protection from artillery fire. The practical use of naval armor began with its use by the French in 1855 in the Crimean War, when plates of wrought iron 4½ inches thick were invulnerable. The thickness of the plates was increased to over 8 inches in 1868 and to over 12 inches in 1872. A solid plate was found to be superior to a series of plates of the same total thickness, separated by layers of other material, as wood. In 1876 iron was rejected in favor of plates either all steel or having a steel face. The latter were made by the Wilson process, consisting in running molten steel upon a white-hot plate of wrought iron, or by the Ellis process, in which a thin steel plate is united to the iron by running molten steel in between them. The compound plates failed to hold their own with the steel, but in 1890 the principle of a hard surface combined with a softer backing was successfully developed in the Harvey process, invented by H. A. Harvey, of New Jersey. It consists in carburizing the face of a piece of low-carbon steel by subjecting it to the action of carbon at a very high heat, and then to a sudden chilling, as by a spray of cold water. Plates so made shatter projectiles which would break to pieces a plate entirely hard or perforate one entirely soft. Face-hardened armor is most effectively attacked by a soft-nosed shell (see ARMOR-PIERCING). Increased tenacity was soon gained by the addition of nickel to the steel. The improved Harvey or Krupp process, while a secret, seems to include the addition of chromium as well as nickel to the metal. For the distribution of armor on vessels, see NAVY, 2. The success of naval armor quickly led to its use for land fortifications also. For inland forts, liable to continued bombardment by light guns, nickel-steel armor is well adapted; for coast defenses, open to brief attacks by heavy guns, the Gruson armor is much used, esp. on the Continent. This consists of massive blocks of chilled cast iron, built together to form shields. Its weight prevents its use on shipboard.

6. Any similar protective covering: a The water-tight suit of a diver. b A more or less hard and rigid protective covering of an animal or plant, as the plates of an armadillo. c A sheathing of wire wound on garden hose.

ar'mor-pierc'ing, ar'mour-pierc'ing, a. Capable of, or used for the purpose of, piercing armor; — said of shot or shell, the shot having a smaller bursting charge and greater penetrative power than shell. In the U. S. Navy, armor-piercing shells have a solid, pointed head and a length of about three or three and a half calibers. High explosive bursting charges are now generally used. The material is hardened forged steel, but a soft steel cap, or nose, is generally fitted on the point. This, by yielding on the first shock of impact, prevents the shattering of the projectile and, as is believed, tends to hold the point against the spot of impact and may act as a lubricant. Cf. BITING ANGLE; see ARMOR, n., 5.

arm's length. The length of the arm; fig., a good distance.

arm's reach. Distance the arm can reach.

Arm'strong gun (ärm'strŏng). Ordnance. A rifled gun built according to the system of built-up, wrought-iron ordnance invented about 1855 by Sir W. G. Armstrong of England. Guns constructed on this system have been both muzzle-loading and breech-loading, and have ranged from light field guns to the heaviest ordnance. The body of the breech-loading guns was of coiled wrought-iron tubes, welded together end to end, reënforced in the rear of the trunnions by two additional tubes or jackets, the outer consisting of a spiral coil, the intermediate of an iron slab bent and welded. The muzzle-loading guns were made of an interior steel tube, supported in the rear by a solid breech plug and over the seat of the charge by a breech piece, the tube and breech piece being further strengthened by wrought-iron tubes shrunk into position. The modern guns of the system are often referred to as of the "Elswick" pattern, after the location of the great ordnance works.

2. A collection or body of men armed for war, esp. one organized in companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, and divisions, under proper officers.

3. A body of persons organized for the advancement of a cause; as, the Blue Ribbon Army.

4. A great number; vast multitude; host; array.

Syn. — Forces, host, troops, array.

army corps (kōr), or (French) corps' d'ar'mée' (kōr'-där'mā'). A main body containing two or more divisions of a large army, organized as a complete army, comprising all arms (in practice varying in relative proportions) and sufficient in itself for all the operations of war. In the United States it is composed (theoretically) of three divisions each of three brigades, each consisting of three regiments of infantry, a brigade of cavalry, the corps artillery, engineers, telegraphers, etc. In the British army its composition is practically the same; but in both services its composition varies greatly in practice.

Army List. In England, an officially published list of the commissioned officers in the army. Cf. ARMY REGISTER.

army organization. The system by which a country raises, classifies, arranges, and equips its armed land forces. The usual divisions are: (1) A regular or active army, in which soldiers serve continuously with the colors and live in barracks or cantonments when not in the field; (2) the reserves of this army, in which the soldiers, while remaining constantly subject to a call to the colors, live at their homes, being summoned more or less frequently to report for instruction, drill, or maneuvers: and (3) one or more classes of soldiers organized largely for territorial defense, living at home and having only occasional periods of drill and instruction, who are variously called home reserves (as in the table below), second, third, etc., line of defense (the regular army and its reserves ordinarily constituting the first line of defense), territorial forces, or the like. In countries where conscription prevails a soldier is supposed to serve a given number of years. He is usually enrolled first in the regular army, then passes to its reserves, then into the home reserves, to serve until he reaches the age limit. If for any reason he is not enrolled in the regular army, he may begin his service in the army reserves or even the home reserves, but then serves the full number of years or up to the age limit. In equipment the organization of the army is into the three great arms of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, together with more or less numerous other branches, such as engineers, medical corps, etc., besides the staff organizations such as those of the pay and subsistence departments.

ar-raign', v. t. ; AR-RAIGNED' (-rānd') ; AR-RAIGN'ING. [ME. arainen, arenen, OF. araisnier, F. arraisonner, fr. LL. arrationare to address, to call before court ; L. ad + ratio reason, reasoning, LL. cause, judgment. See REASON.] 1. Formerly, to call to account ; to interrogate ; hence, Law : To call or set (a prisoner) at the bar of a court to answer to the charge of an indictment. In the technical common-law procedure in arraigning a prisoner he is called to the bar by his name ; the indictment is read to him ; and he is asked, "How say you (A B), are you guilty, or not guilty ?" The next step is judgment if he confesses guilt ; or entry of his plea if he does not. Formerly, when the trial by battle was demandable, upon entering a plea of not guilty the prisoner was asked how he would be tried, but this is now unnecessary and obsolete.

2. To call to account, or accuse, before the bar of reason, taste, or any other tribunal.

They will not arraign you for want of knowledge. Dryden
It is not arrogance, but timidity, of which the Christian body should now be arraigned by the world. I. Taylor.

Syn. — Accuse, impeach, indict, denounce. See CHARGE.

2. Containing arrogance, marked with arrogance; proceeding from undue claims or self-importance; — applied to things; as, arrogant pretensions or behavior.

Syn. — Proud, disdainful, overweening, contumelious; bold, forward, presuming, audacious; lordly, lofty, contemptuous, overbearing, domineering, impertinent, impudent. — ARROGANT, PRESUMPTUOUS, HAUGHTY, SUPERCILIOUS, INSOLENT, INSULTING. One is ARROGANT who is disposed to claim for one's self, often aggressively, more consideration than is warranted or justly due; as, "Carlyle indeed is arrogant and overbearing" (Margaret Fuller). One is PRESUMPTUOUS who is self-assertive beyond the bounds of modesty, or forward to take undue liberties, as, "presumptuous vassals" (Shak.). HAUGHTY implies consciousness, often disdainful, of superiority, especially arising from pride of birth or station; as, a haughty and imperious nature. SUPERCILIOUS (see etym.) implies a lofty and contemptuous demeanor, verging upon insolence; as, a supercilious stare. INSOLENT suggests gross and offensive disregard for the feelings of others; as, "your insolent retinue" (Shak.). INSULTING implies a personal affront, in words or actions, often indicative of scorn or triumph; as, an insulting proposal. See OFFICIOUS, PRIDE, AUDACITY, AFFRONT, CONTEMPTUOUS.

I am told further, that you treat the few you correspond with in a very arrogant style, and tell them you condescend to correspond in disturbing your meditations; . . but shall positively assert, because I never received any such submissory epistle from you. Pope.

Of her queenly beauty little remains except its stateliness; not now gracious, but haughty, rigid, silently enduring Carlyle ar'ro-gate (-gāt), v. t.; AR'RO-GAT'ED (-gāt'ĕd); AR'RO-GAT'-ING (-gāt'ĭng). [L. arrogatus, p. p. of adrogare, arrogare, to ask, appropriate to one's self; ad + rogare to ask. See ROGATION.] 1. To assume, or claim as one's own, unduly, proudly, or presumptuously; to make undue claims to, from vanity or baseless pretensions to right or merit; as, the Pope arrogated dominion over kings.

Because of his knowledge he [Dante] was somewhat presumptuous, disdainful, and haughty. C. E. Norton.

Does not the haughty person show the temper of his soul in the supercilious roll of his eye? Spectator.

He arrogated to himself the right of deciding dogmatically what was orthodox doctrine. Macaulay.

2. To appropriate or ascribe to another.

3. Rom. Law. To adopt by the form, and with the effects, prescribed for the case of a person sui juris. Because of the fact that such adoption might cause a family with its sacra to cease to exist, adoption of a person sui juris was permitted only in special cases and by a special procedure, originally a public proceeding sanctioned by the people, later by imperial rescript. See ADOPTION; cf. POTESTAS.

Syn. — See USURP.

Arrows. 1 Grecian; 2, 3, 5 Brazilian (3 Feathers, 5 Point); 4 Indian (Point and method of fastening); 6 From Solomon Islands. (3/5) ar'row (ăr'ō), v. i. 1. To shoot arrows. R. 2 To shoot up or out like an arrow. Rare. 3. Of the sugar cane, to develop arrows; to flower.

arrow arum. A plant of the genus Peltandra;—alluding to the sagittate leaves. P. sagittæfolia is the white arrow arum; P. virginica, the green arrow arum, or Virginia wake-robin.

ar'row-head' (ăr'ō-hĕd'), n. 1. The head of an arrow.

ar'row-head'ed, a. Shaped like the head of an arrow; cuneiform. See CUNEIFORM.

arrow release. Anthropol. Mode of holding and loosing the arrow in shooting with the bow. In the primary release the arrow and cord are held between the ball of the thumb and the second joint of the forefinger. In a variant method, in which the bow is held horizontally, the string is pulled by the first joint of the forefinger with the aid of the second finger. The Mediterranean release consists in drawing the cord by the first joints of the first three fingers, the arrow being held between the fore and middle fingers and placed on the left of the bow. This is the release used by British archers. In the Mongolian release the cord is drawn by the bent thumb overlocked by the forefinger, the arrow being held in the hollow at the base of finger and thumb. A thumb protector is necessary for this method.

Arrow Release. 1 Primary; 2 Mongolian; 3 Mediterranean.

ar'row-root' (ăr'ō-rōōt'), n. 1. A West Indian plant of the genus Maranta, esp. M. arundinacea, widely cultivated. The Indians are said to have used the roots to neutralize the venom of poisoned arrows. See MARANTA.
2. A nutritive starch obtained from the rootstocks of Maranta arundinacea, used as food, esp. for children and invalids; also, a similar starch obtained from other plants, as species of Zamia, Curcuma, etc.

ar'row-wood' (-wōōd'), n. Any of several shrubs having tough pliant shoots, formerly used to make arrows; as, in the United States, the sourwood and various species of Viburnum, and, in England, the alder buckthorn.

ar'row-y (ăr'ō-ĭ), a. 1. Consisting or full of arrows.
2. Resembling an arrow, as in shape, motion, effect, etc.; swift; darting; piercing. "His arrowy tongue." Cowper.
By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone. Byron.
With arrowy vitalities, vivacities, and ingenuities. Carlyle.

ar-roy'o (ă-roi'ō), n.; pl. -os (-ōz). [Sp.] A watercourse; a rivulet; also, a small, and in many cases dry, gully or channel carved by water.

arroyo willow. A willow of the Pacific coast of the United States (Salix lasiolepis) found in arroyos and river beds. It is a shrub or small tree with dull green leaves.

Ar-sac'id (ar-săs'ĭd), n.; pl. ARSACIDÆ (-ĭ-dē) or ARSACIDES (-ĭdz). [L. Arsacidæ, pl., fr. Arsaces, Gr. 'Αρσάκης, Arsaces, founder of the dynasty.] A member of a dynasty of Parthian and Armenian rulers and princes which originated in the revolt of the Parthians against the Seleucidæ about 250 B. C., and continued in power in Parthia until the overthrow of that kingdom by the Persian Sassanidæ 224 A. D., and in Armenia until 428 A. D., although latterly merely as Persian governors.

arse (ärs), n. [AS. ears, ærs; akin to OHG. ars, G. arsch, D. aars, Sw. ars, Dan. arls, Gr. ὄρρος (cf. οὐρά tail).] 1. The buttocks or posteriors; rump; hence, hind or rear end; tail, as of a cart. Obs. or Vulgar.
2. The bottom end of a wooden pulley block, in which is the score for the rope strap.

ar'se-dine (ăr'sē-dĭn; -dēn), n. [Of uncertain origin.] An alloy of copper and zinc made into very thin sheets like gold leaf, used in decoration; a kind of Dutch metal.

ar'se-nal (ăr'sē-năl), n. [It. arsenale (cf. F. & Sp. arsenal, It. & Sp. darsena) dock; all fr. Ar. dārçinā'ah house of industry or fabrication; dār house + çinā'ah, art, industry, or Ar. article al + çinā'ah.] 1. A dockyard. Obs.
2. A public establishment for the storage or manufacture of arms and all military equipments, whether for land or naval service.

ar'se-nate (ăr'sē-nāt), n. Chem. A salt of arsenic acid.

ar'se-nic (ăr'sē-nĭk, ärs'nĭk, as in the Oxf. E D. and other Eng. Dicts., as common in England), n. [F. arsenic, L. arsenicum, Gr. ἀρσενικόν, ἀρρενικόν, yellow orpiment, fr. ἀρσενικός or ἀρρενικός masculine, ἄρρην male, on account of its strength.] 1. Orpiment; also, realgar. Obs.
2. One of the elements, a solid, brittle substance of tin-white to steel-gray color and metallic luster, occurring free and also in the minerals orpiment, realgar, arsenolite, arsenopyrite, cobaltite, smaltite, niccolite, etc. Symbol, As; at. wt., 74.96. Native arsenic is generally in tarnished granular or reniform masses, having a hardness of 3.5 and sp. gr. 5.63–5.73. The commercial article is chiefly made by heating arsenopyrite; it is added to lead for making shot. Metallic arsenic vaporizes without melting at about 180° C. (356° F.). Weight per cu. ft., 357.5 lbs. Black and yellow allotropic forms of arsenic are also known. Chemically, arsenic is usually trivalent or pentavalent, and in many ways resembles phosphorus. Both it and its soluble compounds are extremely poisonous, yet minute amounts of it are said to occur normally in the human body.
3. Arsenious oxide (which see).

ar-sen'ic (ăr-sĕn'ĭk), a. Chem. Pert. to, or containing, arsenic;—said of compounds in which arsenic is pentavalent. arsenic acid, any of three acids derived from arsenic oxide, As_2O_5, analogous to the phosphoric acids and called respectively orthoarsenic acid (H_3AsO_4), metarsenic acid ($HAsO_3$), and pyroarsenic acid ($H_4As_2O_7$); specif., the ortho acid. All three are obtainable as colorless or white crystalline solids; but the meta and pyro acids when dissolved change to the ortho acid.

ar-sen'i-cal (-ĭ-kŭl), a. Of, pertaining to, or containing, arsenic; as, arsenical vapor; arsenical wall papers. arsenical antimony, allemontite. — a. pyrites, arsenopyrite.

ar-sen'i-cal, n. Any insecticide compound of arsenic.

arsenic antidote. Med. A preparation of ferric hydroxide and magnesia which forms an insoluble compound with arsenic solutions, thus rendering them inert.

ar-sen'i-cate (-kāt), v. t.; AR-SEN'I-CAT'ED (-kāt'ĕd); AR-SEN'I-CAT'ING (-kāt'ĭng). To combine with arsenic; to treat, mix, or impregnate with arsenic.

arsenic disulphide. Chem. An orange-yellow or red compound, As_2S_2, occurring native as realgar and also prepared artificially. It is used in pyrotechny and in tanning.

arsenic hydride. Chem. a Arsine. b A solid compound, As_8H_2, formed as a brown silky mass when sodium arsenide is decomposed by water.

arsenic pentasulphide. Chem. A compound, As_2S_5, obtained as a yellow fusible mass by heating the trisulphide with sulphur. It is also formed when hydrogen sulphide is passed into a solution of arsenic acid.

arsenic trichloride. Chem. A colorless oily liquid, $AsCl_3$, obtained by burning arsenic in chlorine and otherwise.

arsenic trisulphide. Chem. A yellow compound, As_2S_3, occurring native as orpiment and prepared artificially by passing hydrogen sulphide into an acid solution of arsenious oxide or by subliming arsenious oxide with sulphur. It is used in the arts and was formerly much used as a pigment under the name of king's yellow or arsenic yellow.

ar'se-nide (ăr'sē-nīd; -nĭd; 184), n. Chem. A binary compound of arsenic with a positive element or radical.

ar-se'ni-ous (ăr-sē'nĭ-ŭs), a. [Cf. F. arsénieux.] 1. Pert. to, consisting of, or containing, arsenic; as, arsenious glass.
2. Chem. Pertaining to, or containing, arsenic;—said of compounds in which arsenic is trivalent. arsenious acid. a Properly, an acid, H_3AsO_3, known only in the form of its salts, the arsenites; also, the hypothetical acid $HAsO_2$, derived from the former, by loss of water, and distinguished as metarsenious acid. b Arsenious oxide (an old name). — a. oxide, a white or transparent substance, As_4O_6 or As_2O_3, having an astringent sweetish taste, and strong poisonous properties;—called also arsenic, white arsenic, etc. It is obtained by roasting arsenical ores and is used in glass making, as a mordant in calico printing, in making pigments, rat poisons, etc., in taxidermy, and in medicine. It enters the market as a white powder, or in transparent vitreous masses (arsenic glass) which in time become white and porcelainlike.

ar'se-nite (-nīt), n. [Cf. F. arsénite.] Chem. A salt of arsenious acid.

ar'se-ni'u-ret'ed } (-nī'ū-rĕt'ĕd), a. Chem. Combined with ar'se-ni'u-ret'ted } arsenic; as, arseniureted hydrogen.

ar-sen'o-py'rite (ăr-sĕn'ō-pī'rīt; ăr'sē-nō-), n. [arsenic + pyrite.] Min. A hard, tin-white or grayish sulpharsenide of iron, FeAsS, occurring in prismatic orthorhombic crystals, or in masses or grains;—called also arsenical pyrites and mispickel. It is found chiefly in crystalline rocks. It is the principal ore of arsenic and sometimes contains gold, cobalt, or nickel. H., 5.5–6. Sp. gr., 5.9–6.2.

ar'sha rite (ăr'shā). [Skr. ārsha.] Hindu Law. A form of marriage in which the bridegroom pays to the bride's father a bull and a cow, or two of each.

ar-sheen' } (ăr-shēn'), n. [Russ. arshin, of Turkish-Tatar ar-shin' } origin; Turk. arshin, arshūn, ell, yard.] A ar-shine' } measure of length in Turkey, Russia, and other countries. In Russia it equals 28.0 inches (71.1 cm.); in Turkey the arsheen is now legally one meter, but in common use still retains its old value of between 26 and 28 inches (for land, 30 inches). See GUZ, PIK.

ar'sine (ar'sĭn; -sēn; 184), n. [FROM ARSENIC.] Chem. Arseniureted hydrogen, AsH_3, a colorless inflammable gas, having an odor like garlic. It is one of the most poisonous of all substances. It is formed when hydrogen is liberated in a solution containing an arsenic compound. Cf. MARSH TEST.

ar-sin'ic (ăr-sĭn'ĭk), a. Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating any of a series of acids derived from arsenic acid by the replacement of two hydroxyl groups by univalent hydrocarbon radicals, and having the general formula $RR'AsO{\cdot}OH$. They are in general white and crystalline.

ar'sis (ăr'sĭs), n.; pl. ARSES (-sēz). [L. arsis, Gr. ἄρσις a raising or lifting, fr. αἴρειν to raise or lift up.] 1. a Gr. & Lat. Pros. The unaccented part of a foot, the accented part being called the thesis. Cf. THESIS. The true ancient meanings of the terms arsis and thesis have commonly been reversed through a misunderstanding, but their original signification is now becoming the usage of leading authorities. b In present popular acceptation, the strong or accented syllable of a foot, as in English or classical meter.
The unaccented part of the foot is termed the arsis. . . . The name thesis originally referred to the setting down of the foot in beating time or marching, or to the movement of the leader's hand in making the downward beat; and arsis or like manner meant the raising of the foot or hand. But the Roman grammarians misunderstood the Greek terms, supposing them to refer to the lowering and raising of the voice, and so interchanged them. Hence many modern writers prefer to use arsis to denote the accented, and thesis the unaccented, part of the foot. G. M. Lane.
2. Music. The elevation of the hand, or that part of the measure at which it is raised, in beating time; the weak or unaccented part of the measure; — opposed to thesis.

ar'son (ăr'sŭn), n. [OF. arson, arsun, fr. L. ardere, arsum, to burn.] Law. The malicious burning of a dwelling house or outhouse of another man, which by the common law is felony. The definition of this crime is varied by statutes in different jurisdictions, and generally it has been widened to include the similar burning of other property, as of churches, factories, ships, or of one's own house.

ar-son'ic (ăr-sŏn'ĭk), a. Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating any one of a series of acids of the general formula $RAsO(OH)_2$; as, ethyl arsonic acid, $C_2H_5AsO(OH)_2$. They are in general white crystalline compounds, and may be regarded as derived from arsenic acid by the replacement of hydroxyl by a hydrocarbon radical. Cf. SULPHONIC.

ar-so'ni-um (ăr-sō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; arsenic + ammonium.] Chem. A hypothetical radical, AsH_4, containing arsenic, and corresponding to ammonium, NH_4. Compounds of the simple radical are not known, but only those in which carbon radicals take the place in it of hydrogen; as, tetramethyl arsonium iodide, $As(CH_3)_4I$. Cf. quaternary ammonium compounds, under QUATERNARY.

art (ärt), n. [F. art, L. ars, artis.] 1. Skill, dexterity, or the power of performing certain actions, acquired by experience, study, or observation; knack.
2. Skill in the adaptation of things in the natural world to the uses of human life; human contrivance or ingenuity.
Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.
3. A branch of learning; a science; esp., a science such as grammar, logic, or mathematics, serving chiefly as a discipline or as an instrument of knowledge; specif.: pl. Those branches of learning taught in the academical course of colleges; as, master of arts. See LIBERAL ARTS.
4. Hence, learning or the field of learning.
So vast is art, so narrow human wit. Pope.
5. The general principles of any branch of learning or of any developed craft; a system of rules or of organized modes of operation serving to facilitate the performance of certain actions; as, the art of building or engraving; the art of war; the art of navigation.
There's no art
To find the mind's construction in the face. Shak.
Art in general consists of the truths of science, arranged in the most convenient order for practice, instead of the order which is the most convenient for thought. J. S. Mill.
All arts, we must remember, are phases of the social mind. We are so much in the habit of thinking of them in terms of art products that we forget that the arts themselves are groups of ideas and acquisitions of skill that exist only in the minds, muscles, and nerves of living men. F. H Giddings.
6. Systematic application of knowledge or skill in effecting a desired result. Also, an occupation or business requiring such knowledge or skill; a craft; as, mechanical or industrial arts.
The fishermen can't employ their art with so much success in so troubled a sea. Addison.
7. An organization of men practicing a craft or trade; guild.
The Art of Wool, that is, . . the corporation of the dealers in wool. C. E. Norton.
8. Application of skill and taste to production according to æsthetic principles; an occupation having to do with the theory or practice of taste in the expression of beauty in form, color, sound, speech, or movement. Specif., such application to the production of beauty in plastic materials

Ar'ta'gnan', D' (där'tan'yăN'). The hero of Dumas's "Les Trois Mousquetaires," and a character prominent in "Vingt ans après" and "Le Vicomte de Bragelonne." He is an adventurous young Gascon who wins his way to fortune by swordplay and intrigue, with the aid of his three musketeer friends. Charles de Baatz D'Artagnan (1611 or 1612–73), the original of the character, was a person of some note.

art bronze. An alloy consisting chiefly or wholly of copper and tin, suitable for making statues, busts, etc.

ar-tel' (är-tĕl'; Russ. är-tyĕl'), n. [Russ. artel', fr. Tatar ortak el the people.] In Russia, an association of independent laborers for collective work on a job with division of the profits. It is sometimes temporary in character and sometimes more like a guild.

Ar-te'mi-a (är-tē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. Ἀρτεμις, Artemis.] Zoöl. A genus of phyllopod Crustacea found in salt lakes and the brines of salt works; also [l. c.], a crustacean of this genus; a brine shrimp.

Ar'te-mis (är'tĕ-mĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἀρτεμις.] Gr. Relig. An Olympian goddess of varied attributes; in myth and art, most typically the virgin huntress, goddess of wild nature, who is associated with the moon as her twin brother, Apollo, is with the sun; — by the Romans identified with Diana (which see). In her earliest phase, Artemis was a goddess of the lakes, rivers, and woods, and of the wild life of these places, especially of animals of the chase, as the boar, stag, and fawn. Hence her Homeric epithet, Agrotera (huntress). She was also connected with wolves, with bears (as Brauronia), with bulls (as Tauropolos), etc. Traces of human sacrifice to her are preserved as in the tale of Iphigenia (herself a form of the goddess). From fosterer of wild life she comes to be giver of increase to herds, thence goddess of childbirth and of marriage (cf. ELEITHYIA), and it was only in later times that the idea of virgin purity became the dominant conception of Artemis Parthenos (pär'thē-nŏs). From her early association with Hecate, she became a goddess of magic, of night, goblins, and the underworld, and probably from this association she also acquired her relation to the moon. Nemesis, or Upis, of Rhamnus was regarded as a form of Artemis, and several other goddesses, such as the Thracian Bendis and Cretan Britomartis, are little more than her local forms. Although twin of Apollo, the place of her birth was said to be Ortygia (variously located as Ephesus, Syracuse, Delos) whence her epithet Ortygia. For Artemis of Ephesus see DIANA. Cf. OLYMPIAN.

Artemis (or Diana) of Versailles.

It was the personality of Artemis . . . that consecrated that idea of the beauty of purity, the ideal of the life unsullied by passion, which received here and there a rare expression in Greek literature and more frequently inspired the forms of art. L. R. Farnell.

Ar'te-mis'i-a (är'tĕ-mĭz'ĭ-ȧ; -mĭzh'ĭ-ȧ; 277), n. [L. artemisia mugwort, Gr. ἀρτεμισία.] Bot. A large genus of asteraceous plants, natives of north temperate and antarctic regions. They are strongly scented herbs or shrubs with small rayless flower heads disposed in spikes or racemes. The species are most abundant in the western United States, where they are called sagebrushes. A. absinthium is the wormwood, A. abrotanum the southernwood.

ar-te'ri-al (är-tē'rĭ-ăl), a. [Cf. F. artériel.] 1. Of or pertaining to an artery or arteries; as, the arterial system.

2. Of or pertaining to a main channel (resembling an artery), as a river, canal, or railroad.

arterial blood, blood which has been oxygenated and purified (arterialized) during passage through the lungs. It is of a brighter red color than venous blood. — a. bulb, Anat., the bulbus arteriosus. — a. duct, Anat., the ductus arteriosus. — a. gland, Anat., a small mass of peculiar vascular tissue of unknown function found in several parts of the body. The carotid and coccygeal glands are examples.

ar-te'ri-al-ize (är-tē'rĭ-ăl-īz), v. t.; AR-TE'RI-AL-IZED (-īzd); AR-TE'RI-AL-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). To transform (venous blood) into arterial blood by exposure to oxygen in the lungs or other respiratory organs, oxygen being absorbed and carbon dioxide evolved; to make arterial. — ar-te'ri-al-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'-), n.

ar'ter-in (är'tĕr-ĭn), n. [arterio- + -in.] Physiol. Chem. According to some, the true coloring matter of arterial blood, oxyhæmoglobin being considered a cleavage product.

ar-te'ri-o- (ar-tē'rĭ-ō-). A combining form from Greek ἀρτηρία, artery.

ar-te'ri-o-scle-ro'sis (-sklē-rō'sĭs), n. [NL.; arterio- + sclerosis.] Med. Abnormal thickening and hardening of the walls of the arteries, esp. of the intima, occurring mostly in old age. — ar-te'ri-o-scle-rot'ic (-rŏt'ĭk), a.

ar-te'ri-o-tome' (-tōm'), n. Med. The cutting instrument used in arteriotomy.

ar-te'ri-ot'o-my (-ŏt'ŏ-mĭ), n. [L. arteriotomia, Gr. ἀρτηριοτομία; ἀρτηρία + τομή a cutting.] Med. The opening of an artery, esp. for bloodletting

ar'ter-y (är'tĕr-ĭ), n.; pl. ARTERIES (-ĭz). [L. arteria windpipe, artery, Gr. ἀρτηρία.] 1. The trachea, or windpipe. Obs. "Under the artery, or windpipe." Holland.

2. Anat. One of the tubular branching vessels which carry the blood from the heart to the various parts and organs of the body. In man and the higher vertebrates there are two principal arteries, the aorta and the pulmonary artery (which see). The small branches of the arteries break up into minute capillaries (see CAPILLARY), which reunite to form veins. Arteries have thicker, more muscular and elastic walls than veins. In large arteries the walls consist of an outer fibrous and elastic coat (adventitia), a middle muscular coat (media), and an inner coat (intima) of fibrous and elastic tissue lined with endothelium. The blood in the arteries is under considerable pressure, and flows in waves (the pulse) due to the beats of the heart. When an artery is cut the bleeding can be stopped by compressing the artery between the heart and the wound. See CIRCULATION.

ar'ter-y, v. t.; AR'TER-IED (-ĭd); AR'TER-Y-ING. To supply with, or as if with, arteries; to pass through like an artery.

Ar-te'sian (är-tē'zhăn), a. [F. artésien.] Of or pertaining to Artois, anciently called Artesium, in France.

Ideal Section of Artesian Well. a a Impermeable Strata; b Water-bearing Stratum.

Artesian well. a A well made by boring into the earth a till water is reached which, from internal pressure, flows spontaneously like a fountain; — so called because the general knowledge of such wells was derived from those at Artois, where they were made as early as about 1750. They are usually of small diameter and often of great depth. b Loosely, in the United States, any deep bored well.

art'ful (ärt'fo͝ol), a. [art + -ful.] 1. Performed with, or characterized by, art or skill. Archæc. "Artful strains." "Artful terms." Milton.

2. Produced by art; artificial; imitative. Addison.

Either veritable relics of antiquity, or with so exquisite a touch of artful ruin on them that they are better than if really antique Hawthorne

3. Using or exhibiting much art, skill, or contrivance; dexterous; skillful.

He [was] too artful a writer to set down events in exact historical order Dryden

4. Cunning; disposed to cunning indirectness of dealing; crafty; as, an artful boy; — the usual sense.

Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

Syn. — Skillful, adroit, dexterous; crafty, tricky, sly, deceitful, designing. See CUNNING.

Artful Dodger, a young thief, an adept in villainy, in Dickens's "Oliver Twist."

— art'ful-ly, adv. — art'ful-ness, n.

ar'the-mis (är'thē-mĭs), n. [Said to be for Artemis.] A handsome bluish black, white-banded butterfly (Basilarchia arthemis) of Canada and the northern United States.

ar-thral'gi-a (är-thrăl'jĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; arthro- + -algia.] Med. Neuralgic pain in a joint. — ar-thral'gic (-jĭk), a.

ar-threc'to-my (är-thrĕk'tŏ-mĭ), n. [arthro- + -ectomy.] Med. Excision of a joint.

ar-thrit'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } See ARTHRITIS.] 1. Pertaining to or affecting the joints. Sir T. Browne.

2. Of or pertaining to arthritis; gouty. Cowper.

ar-thrit'ic, n. A person affected with gout.

ar-thri'tis (är-thrī'tĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἀρθρῖτις gout, fr. ἄρθρον joint.] Med. Inflammation of the joints, esp. gout.

arthritis deformans (dē-fôr'măNz) [NL., deforming arthritis], chronic inflammation of the joints marked by destruction of parts of the joints and new bone formation which leads to extensive deformities.

ar'thri-tism (ar'thrĭ-tĭz'm), n. Med. Tendency to gout; gouty diathesis.

ar'thro-, or arthr-. A combining form fr. Gr. ἄρθρον, joint.

ar'thro-branch (är'thrō-brăŋk) } n.; L. pl. -BRANCHIÆ (-brăŋ'kĭ-ē). [NL. arthrobranchia; see ARTHRO-, BRANCHIA.] Zoöl. A gill attached to the articular membrane between the body and the basal joint of a leg of a crustacean.

ar'thro-chon-dri'tis (-kŏn-drī'tĭs), n. [NL.] Med. Chondritis of a joint.

ar'throd'e-sis (är-thrŏd'ē-sĭs), n. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. δέσις a binding together.] Surg. Surgical fixation of joints.

ar-thro'di-a (är-thrō'dĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἀρθρωδία, fr. ἀρθρώδης well articulated; ἄρθρον joint + εἶδος shape.] Anat. A form of diarthrodial articulation in which the articular surfaces are nearly flat; a gliding joint. — ar-thro'di-al (-ăl), a. — ar-throd'ic (-thrŏd'ĭk), a.

Ar'thro-di'ra (är'thrō-dī'rȧ), n. pl. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. δειρή neck.] Paleon. An order or subclass of Devonian fishes, probably related to the Dipnoi, having the head and fore part of the body protected by bony plates, those forming the head shield being movably articulated with the body shield. See COCCOSTEUS, and DINICHTHYS, Illust.

Ar'thro-gas'tra (är'thrō-găs'trȧ), n. pl. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. γαστήρ stomach.] Zoöl. A primary division of the Arachnida, comprising those which have the abdomen segmented, as the scorpions, harvestmen, etc.

ar-throg'e-nous (är-thrŏj'ē-nŭs), a. [*arthro*spore + -genous.] Bacteriol. Designating a mode of spore formation in which individual cells of the chain pass into the resting stage and function as spores. See ARTHROSPORE.

ar-throg'ra-phy (är-thrŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [arthro- + -graphy.] Anat. A description of the joints.

ar'thro-gry-po'sis (är'thrō-grĭ-pō'sĭs), n. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. γρύπωσις a crooking.] Med. Permanent flexure of a joint, most common in children.

ar-throl'o-gy (ar-thrŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [arthro- + -logy.] Anat. That part of anatomy which treats of joints.

ar'thro-mere (är'thrō-mēr), n. [arthro- + -mere.] Zoöl. One of the body segments of articulate animals. — ar'thro-mer'ic (-mĕr'ĭk), a.

ar'thro-pleure (är'thrō-plo͝or), ar'thro-pleu'ra (-plo͝o'rȧ), n.; L. pl. -PLEURÆ (-plo͝o'rē). [NL. arthro- + Gr. πλευρά the side.] Zoöl. The lateral or limb-bearing portion of an arthromere.

ar'thro-pod (-pŏd), a. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to the Arthropoda. — n. One of the Arthropoda.

Ar-throp'o-da (är-thrŏp'ŏ-dȧ), n. pl. [NL.; arthro- + -poda.] Zoöl. A phylum consisting of the articulate animals having jointed limbs. The Insecta, Arachnida, and Crustacea are its most important classes; the Myriapoda, Pycnogonida, Trilobites, Onychophora, and sometimes other groups, are now also considered as classes. In number of species the Arthropoda far exceed other phyla. The body is divided into metameric segments; in the higher forms it consists of three distinct parts, head, thorax, and abdomen, each composed of several or many segments. Typical segments bear each a pair of jointed limbs. The brain is dorsal to the alimentary canal, and is connected with a ventral chain of ganglia. The body is generally covered with a chitinous shell, which is molted at intervals. The heart is usually elongated, with lateral openings for the entrance of the blood, and continued at each end into an artery. Veins are often wanting, the blood returning through the general body spaces. — ar-throp'o-dal (-dăl), a. — ar-throp'o-dan (-dăn), a. — ar-throp'o-dous (-dŭs), a.

Ar'thro-po'ma-ta (är'thrō-pō'mȧ-tȧ; -pŏm'ȧ-tȧ), n. pl. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. πῶμα lid.] Zoöl. An order of Brachiopoda having a hinged calcareous shell, and usually a calcareous support for the lophophore. The intestine ends blindly. — ar'thro-pom'a-tous (-pŏm'ȧ-tŭs; -pō'mȧ-tŭs), a.

ar-throp'ter-ous (är-thrŏp'tĕr-ŭs), a. [arthro- + -pterous.] Zoöl. Having jointed fin rays, as most fishes.

ar'thro-py'o-sis (är'thrō-pī'ō-sĭs), n. [NL.; arthro- + pyosis.] Med. Suppuration or formation of an abscess in a joint.

ar-thro'sis (är-thrō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἄρθρωσις, fr. ἄρθρον joint.] Anat. Any articulation or suture uniting two bones.

ar'thro-spore (är'thrō-spōr), n. [arthro- + spore.] Bacteriol. A bacterial resting cell, — formerly considered a spore (cf. ENDOSPORE), but now known to occur even in endosporous bacteria — ar'thro-spor'ic (-spŏr'ĭk), ar-thros'po-rous (är-thrŏs'pō-rŭs; ar'thrō-spō'rŭs), a.

Art., or art. Abbr Arthur; article; artificial; artillery; artist. -art See -ARD.

ar-ta'ba (är-tä'bȧ), n. [See ARDEB.] See MEASURE.

Ar'ta-mus (är'tȧ-mŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἄρταμος butcher, cook.] Zoöl. A genus of oscine birds, type of the family Artamidæ (är-tăm'ĭ-dē), or wood swallow family. See WOOD SWALLOW.

ar'tar (är'tär), n. A tropical African rutaceous tree (Zanthoxylum senegalense); also, its root, which is a cardiac stimulant.

ar'ta-rine (är'tȧ-rĭn; -rēn), n. Also -rin. An alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{23}O_4N$, obtained from artar.

Ar'te-gal (är'tē-gôl), n. 1. A mythic king of Britain in the Chronicle of Geoffrey of Monmouth. See ELIDURE.

2. A character in Spenser's "Faerie Queene," representing Justice. He married Britomart.

ar'te-mis'in (är'tē-mĭs'ĭn), n. Chem. A crystalline substance, $C_{15}H_{18}O_4$, gradually turning yellow in air, found in Artemisia maritima.

Ar'te-mis'i-on (-ĭ-ŏn), n. [Gr. Ἀρτεμίσιον.] A temple or sacred place of Artemis.

ar-te'ri-arc'ti-a (ar-tē'rĭ-ark'shĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; L. arteria artery + arctus, arctus, narrow] Med. Stenosis of an artery.

ar'te-ri'a-sis (är'tē-rī'ȧ-sĭs), n. [NL.] Med. Decomposition of the artery walls.

ar-te'ri-ec'ta-sis (ar-tē'rĭ-ĕk'tȧ-sĭs), n [NL.; Gr. ἀρτηρια + ἔκτασις extension.] Med. Arterial dilatation.

ar-te'ri-o-cap'il-la-ry, a. Anat Pertaining to, or situated in, the arteries and capillaries.

ar-te'ri-o-fi-bro'sis, n. [NL.; arterio- + fibrosis.] Med. Fibroid stenosis of the arteries.

ar-te'ri-o-gram', n. [arterio- + -gram.] A sphygmogram.

ar-te'ri-og'ra-phy (ar-tē'rĭ-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [arterio- + -graphy.] A description of the arteries.

ar-te'ri-ole, n. [NL arteriola; cf F artériole] A small artery.

ar-te'ri-o-ma-la'ci-a, n. [NL.; arterio- + malacia.] Med Abnormal softening of the arteries.

ar-te'ri-op'a-thy (ar-tē'rĭ-ŏp'ȧ-thĭ), n. [arterio- + -pathy] Disease of the arteries.

ar-te'ri-o-phle-bot'o-my, n. [arterio- + phlebotomy.] Bloodletting by leeches or scarification.

ar-te'ri-o-se (-ōs), a. Arterial.

ar-te'ri-o-strep'sis, n. [NL.; arterio- + Gr. στρεψις a turning round.] Med. Torsion of an artery to arrest hemorrhage.

ar-te'ri-ous, a. Arterial.

ar-te'ri-o-ve'nous, a. Anat. Pertaining to, or situated in, both the arteries and veins.

ar-te'ri-o-ver'sion, n. [See ARTERIO- + VERSION.] Med. The staying of a hemorrhage, in surgical operations, by eversion of the arterial walls.

Arth. Abbr. Arthur.

ar'then. † EARTHEN.

Ar'thé'nice' (ar'tā'nēs'), n. [F.] An anagram of the Christian name of Catherine de Vivonne, Marquise de Rambouillet (1588–1665), given to her as a poetic title by Malherbe and Racan.

ar'thral, a. Of or pertaining to an arthron, or joint.

ar'thro-bac-te'ri-um, n. Med. A bacterium which is reproduced by arthrospores.

ar-throc'a-ce (ar-thrŏk'ȧ-sē), n. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. κάκη badness.] Med An ulcerated condition or caries of a joint.

ar'thron (ar'thrŏn), n.; L. pl. ARTHRA (ar'thrȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. ἄρθρον.] Anat. An articulation; a joint.

ar'thro-neu-ral'gi-a, n [arthro- + neuralgia] Med. Neuralgic pain in a joint.

ar'thro-phy'ma (ar'thrō-fī'mȧ), n. [NL; arthro- + Gr. φῦμα tumor.] Med. Swelling of a joint.

ar'thro-plas'ty, n [arthro- + -plasty.] Med Formation of joints by artificial means.

ar-thro'si-a (ar-thrō'sĭ-ȧ or -zĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Arthritis.

ar'thro-ste-rig'ma, n. [NL.] Bot. A jointed sterigma.

Ar-thros'tra-ca (ar-thrŏs'trā-kă), n. pl. [NL.; arthro- + Gr. ὄστρακον shell.] Zoöl. An order of Crustacea, of the subclass Malacostraca, having the thorax and abdomen both segmented, and having seven pairs of thoracic legs; Tetradecapoda. It includes the Amphipoda and Isopoda — ar-thros'tra-can (-kăn), a. & n. — ar-thros'tra-cous (-kŭs), a.

ar'thro-tome (är'thrō-tōm), n. [arthro- + -tome.] Surg. A strong scalpel used in the dissection of joints.

ar-throt'o-my (är-thrŏt'ŏ-mĭ), n. Med. Incision of a joint.

Ar-thu'ri-an (är-thū'rĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to King Arthur or his knights. See KING ARTHUR; Knights of the Round Table, under KNIGHT.

ar'ti-ad (är'tĭ-ăd), n. [Gr. ἄρτιος even, fr. ἄρτι exactly.] 1. Chem. Any element or radical whose valence is an even number, as the dyads, tetrads, etc.; — contr. with perissad. 2. Zoöl. One of the Artiodactyla.

ar'ti-choke (-chōk), n. [It. articiocco, perh. corrupted fr. the same word as carciofo; cf. the older spellings archicocco, archicioffo, carciocco, and Sp. alcachofa, Pg. alcachofra; prob. fr. Ar. al-ḥarshaf, al-kharshūf.] 1. a A tall asteraceous plant (Cynara scolymus), somewhat resembling a thistle, with coarse pinnately incised leaves. b The flower head of this plant. It has large oval involucral bracts with fleshy bases, which, with the receptacle, are cooked as a vegetable. Called also bur artichoke.

Artichoke (Cynara scolymus) Much reduced.

2. The Jerusalem artichoke.

ar'ti-cle (ar'tĭ-k'l), n. [F., fr. L. articulus, dim. of artus joint, akin to Gr. ἄρθρον, prob. fr. a root ar to join, fit. Cf. ARTICULATE.] 1. A joint of the body, or a part between joints. Obs.

10. Zoöl. An articulated segment.

an article, or piece, of virtu. See VIRTU. — articles of association, Law, a written agreement embodying the purposes or other terms and conditions of the association of a number of persons for the prosecution of a joint enterprise; esp.: a Such a written agreement duly executed and filed so as to have the force of a charter under general incorporation laws. Chiefly U. S. b The written agreement that under the Companies Acts may accompany the memorandum of association of a company with a liability limited by shares, and must accompany that of a company with a liability limited by guarantee or unlimited, and prescribes the regulations for the government of the company. Eng. — A. of Confederation, the first compact adopted, Nov. 15, 1777, by the original thirteen States of the United States. They went into effect March 1, 1781, and remained the supreme law until the Constitution went into effect. See CONSTITUTION. — a. of impeachment, an instrument which, in cases of impeachment, performs the same office which an indictment does in a common criminal case. — A. of Perth, five articles agreed upon by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, convoked by James VI. in 1618, enjoining kneeling at the Lord's Supper, observance of Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and Pentecost, confirmation, private baptism, and communion. In 1638 the General Assembly declared them void. — A. of Religion, Eccl., statements of the tenets or doctrines of a church; esp., the Forty-two Articles embodying the doctrines of the reformed Church of England, prepared by the English reformers, and published in both Latin and English by royal authority in 1553. They had been preceded by the Ten Articles of 1536, and the Six Articles of 1539, which were of Roman Catholic origin. They were, in 1563, reduced to 39 (thence called the Thirty-nine Articles), and were published in Latin, and in 1571 both in Latin and English, both versions being equally authoritative. They were adopted, with some omissions and slight changes, in 1801 by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The Thirty-five Articles of Religion of the Reformed Episcopal Church, adopted 1875, and the Twenty-five Methodist Articles of Religion, drawn up by John Wesley in 1784, are based on the Thirty-nine Articles. The Lambeth Articles, nine in number, are a Calvinistic appendix to the Thirty-nine Articles, drawn up in Lambeth Palace in London in 1595. They were never approved by a regular synod of the Church, and so have no authority. Articles of Religion, 104 in number, were adopted by the Irish Episcopal Church in 1615, but were ignored when the Thirty-nine Articles were adopted in 1635. — Articles of Schmalkald, articles of faith drawn up in 1537 by Luther, in an effort to bring the Protestants and the Roman Catholics together, and subscribed to at a meeting of Protestant princes and states at Schmalkald, Germany. — a. of the eyre, O. Eng. Law, a list of interrogatories, carried by justices in eyre in the 13th century, and to be addressed to the local juries; — called also capitula itineris. They inquired chiefly concerning felonies, the king's proprietary rights, the assumption or misuse of franchises, and official misdoings of the royal officers, either merely for information or for administering justice. — a. of the navy. See ARTICLES OF WAR, below. — a. of war, the code of rules and regulations for the government of the army (including the navy). In Great Britain the regulations governing the navy, called specif. articles of the navy, are contained in the Naval Discipline Acts of 1866 and 1884. The articles of war governing the army are made by the sovereign under the Army Act of 1881, superseding those formerly enacted annually in the Mutiny Act. The present articles of war of the United States (Rev. Stat. sec. 1342) are those enacted in 1806, with subsequent amendments, and are substantially the same as those of the English Mutiny Act, from which they were taken in 1775. The regulations governing the navy, called specif. a. for the government of the navy, are contained in Rev. Stat. sec. 1624, and were adopted at various times, largely in 1862.

ar'ti-cle, v. t. AR'TI-CLED (-k'ld); AR'TI-CLING (-klĭng). 1. To formulate in articles; to set forth in distinct particulars.

ar-tic'u-la're (-tĭk'ū-lā're) } [NL. articulare.] Anat. A bone in the base of the lower jaw of most vertebrates except mammals, by which the jaw usually articulates with the quadrate bone. Cf. MECKELIAN CARTILAGE.

Ar-tic'u-la'ta (-lā'tă), n. pl. [Neut. pl. fr. L. articulatus furnished with joints, distinct. See ARTICULATE.] Zoöl.

1. One of the four subkingdoms in the classification of Cuvier. It consists of Invertebrata having the body composed of a series of ringlike segments (arthromeres, somites, or metameres). By some writers the unsegmented worms have also been included; by others it is restricted to the Arthropoda. It corresponds nearly with the Annulosa of some authors. The chief subdivisions are Arthropoda (Insecta, Arachnida, Crustacea, etc.) and Anarthropoda, including the Annelida and allied forms ar-tic'u-late (ar-tĭk'ū-lāt), a. [L. articulatus, p. p. of articulare to utter distinctly, prop. to divide into joints. See ARTICLE.] 1. Jointed; formed with joints; consisting of segments united by joints; as, articulate animals or plants.

2. a An order of brachiopods, equiv. to Arthropomata. b = BRACHIATA.

2. Characterized by division into words and syllables; distinctly uttered; spoken so as to be intelligible; as, articulate speech, sounds, words, distinguished from other sounds, mechanical or vocal.

3. Expressed or formulated in clear and logical form.

The whole Greek attitude towards the universe, in so far as the Athens of that age could embody it . . . [is] made articulate in enduring form in the speculations of these . . . men. J. Royce

4. Systematically interrelated; made of complementary parts. "Articulate history." Carlyle.

5. Expressed in articles, or in separate items or particulars. Archaic. Bacon.

6. Consisting of tens; as, "articulate numbers." Obs.

6. A sound made by the vocal organs; an articulate utterance or an elementary sound, esp. a consonant.

7 Phon. In the production of any speech sound, the adjustment of the tongue, with relation to the palate, at the place (called place of articulation) where the tongue has, for that sound, its maximum elevation. This use of the word is common with phoneticians, often with apparent confusion as to the actual phenomena designated.

In this book I have, for want of a better word, often used articulation in the usual way, but the reader should not forget that it refers merely to vocal movements, that it has no connection with the distinctness of speech, and that it implies no action of the organs in any way resembling articulation in the joint E. W. Scripture.

ar-tic'u-la'tion-ist (är-tĭk'ū-lā'shŭn-ĭst), n. One who uses or favors the oral method of teaching the deaf.

ar-tic'u-la-tive (är-tĭk'ū-lā-tĭv), a. Of or pertaining to articulation.

ar'ti-fact (är'tĭ-făkt), n. [L. ars, artis, art + facere, factum, to make.] 1. Archæol. A product of human workmanship; — applied esp. to the simpler products of aboriginal art as distinguished from natural objects.

2. Biol. A structure or appearance in a tissue or cell due to death or the use of reagents, and not present during life.

ar'ti-fice (är'tĭ-fĭs), n. [L. artificium, fr. artifex artificer; ars, artis, art + facere to make: cf. F. artifice.] 1. A handicraft; a trade; art of making. Obs.

2. Workmanship; a skillfully contrived work.

The material universe . . . is the artifice of God, the artifice of the best Mechanist. Cudworth.

3. Artful or skillful contrivance; ingenuity.

His plots were constructed without much artifice. Craik.

4. Crafty device; an artful, ingenious, or elaborate trick; — now the usual meaning.

Those who were conscious of guilt employed numerous artifices for the purpose of averting inquiry. Macaulay.

Syn. — Device, contrivance, expedient; plot, intrigue, machination; blind, sleight, shift, evasion; cheat, fraud, deceit, imposition, imposture. — ARTIFICE, MANEUVER, STRATAGEM, WILE, TRICK, RUSE, SUBTERFUGE, FINESSE agree in the idea of indirect or misleading devices. ARTIFICE is the most general term for an artful or ingenious expedient or contrivance; as, "His wit disdains not always the artifice even of a pun" (Hume). MANEUVER conveys the idea of adroit and dexterous management; STRATAGEM, of a more or less elaborate plan to entrap or circumvent; as, "The Maneuvers of Jane" (H. A. Jones); "If you do not tell me in an honorable manner, I shall certainly be reduced to tricks and stratagems to find it out" (Jane Austen). WILE (see CUNNING) implies mastery of the arts of beguiling and wheedling; TRICK suggests less insinuating, more mischievous or annoying procedure, often with the further implication of something mean or underhanded; as, "He saw the wiles of woman and the weakness of man" (G. Meredith); "Leave him [Pope] as soon as you can. . . . He will certainly play you some devilish trick else" (Spence's Anecdotes). A RUSE is a crafty expedient to divert attention from one's real purposes; a SUBTERFUGE, a shift or evasion with a view to escape or concealment; as, the ruse of exchanging one's own for the enemy's uniform; "Her busy brain missed the subterfuge to cover her slip of the tongue" (G. Meredith). FINESSE suggests diplomacy, and connotes nicety and subtlety of execution; as, "Hours selected from a thousand with a miracle of finesse" (W. Pater). See PRETENSE, CONSPIRACY, AMBUSH.

ar-tif'i-cer (är-tĭf'ĭ-sĕr), n. [Cf. F. artificier.] 1. A skilled or artistic worker; a mechanic or craftsman; one whose occupation requires skill or knowledge of a particular kind, as a silversmith.

2. Mil. Specif.: One who prepares the shells, fuses, etc., in a military laboratory.

4. A cunning or artful fellow. Obs. B. Jonson.

Syn. — See WORKMAN.

ar'ti-fi'cial (är'tĭ-fĭsh'ăl), a. [L. artificialis: cf. F. artificiel. See ARTIFICE.] 1. Made or contrived by art; produced or modified by human skill and labor, in opposition to natural; as, artificial heat or light, gems, salts, minerals, fountains, flowers.

Lives in these touches, livelier than life. Shak.

2. Feigned; fictitious; assumed; affected; not genuine. "Artificial tears." Shak.

3. Artful; skilled; cunning; crafty. Obs. Shak.

4. Cultivated; not indigenous, not of spontaneous growth; as, artificial grasses. Gibbon.

5. Of or according to art; technical. Obs.

Syn. — Assumed, affected, feigned, imaginary, fabulous; unnatural, sham, false, forged, adulterate, bastard. — ARTIFICIAL, FICTITIOUS, FACTITIOUS, SPURIOUS, SUPPOSITITIOUS, COUNTERFEIT. The first three terms may or may not imply intent to deceive, the last three always do. ARTIFICIAL (cf. ARTIFICE) may refer to mode of production (opposed to natural, but not necessarily to real; as, artificial ice, artificial light); or to imitative purpose (opposed to both natural and real; as, artificial flowers, an artificial leg); or to general effect (opposed to genuine, sincere; as, an artificial manner, the artificiality of fashionable life). FICTITIOUS (opposed to true, real) applies to what is feigned or imagined; as, fictitious narrative, characters, names, fictitious

-ary. [L. -aris.] An adj. suffix denoting, pertaining to, of the kind or nature of; as in capill*ary*, exemplar*y*, milit*ary*, etc. A variant of -AR.

Ar'yan (ār'yăn; ăr'ĭ-ăn; 277), n. [Skr. ārya excellent, honorable; akin to the name of the country Iran, and the early name of this people, at least in Asia.] 1. A member of that Caucasic race one branch of which early occupied the Iranian plateau, while another branch entered India, and conquered and amalgamated with the primitive inhabitants of that country; an Indo-Iranian.

2. A member of the race which spoke the language from which the Indo-European languages are derived; hence, loosely, an individual of any of those peoples who have spoken these languages since prehistoric times; an Indo-European. The existence of a prehistoric Aryan race which had passed beyond the nomadic stage of culture, and had developed a relatively exalted type of nature worship, was first assumed by philologists from the close relationship and inferred common origin of the Indo-European languages. This race was supposed to have dwelt in central Asia and thence to have separated in two streams of migration, one toward Persia and India, one toward Europe. In recent years ethnologists have seriously disputed the Asiatic or even the common Aryan origin of the peoples of Europe, while some of the philologists themselves have made Europe rather than Asia the center of dispersion. It is now generally recognized that, whatever the origin of the Indo-European languages, no like origin is to be assigned to all the races speaking them, and in ethnology Aryan is merely a loose term for an Aryan-speaking individual of the Caucasic race (which see).

3. The parent tongue of the Indo-European languages, either the language spoken by an original Aryan race or its hypothetical reconstruction; hence, Indo-European speech in general. See INDO-EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

Parent Aryan seems to have had at least the following vowels: a; i, e; u, o; all of which occurred both short and long. H. Sweet.

Ar'yan, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the Indo-Iranians or their speech. See ARYAN, n., 1.

2. Of or pertaining to the ethnical type of the supposed Aryan race; also, of or pertaining to the Aryan-speaking peoples. See ARYAN, n., 2.

To sum up this difficult Aryan question, the Aryan peoples must be regarded, not as a single ethnical stock, but as an amalgam of many Caucasic, and no doubt some Mongolic elements, leavened by an original xanthochroid strain, and endowed with a certain racial uniformity by the immense preponderance of the Caucasic physical characters, and by the general adoption of Aryan speech, traditions, and institutions. A. H. Keane.

To me, an ethnologist who speaks of an Aryan race, Aryan blood, Aryan eyes and hair is as great a sinner as a linguist who speaks of a dolichocephalic dictionary or a brachycephalic grammar Max Muller.

3. Of or pert. to the Indo-European family of languages or the hypothetical language from which they sprang.

as'ca-rid (ăs'kā-rĭd), n. Zoöl. Any roundworm of the family Ascaridæ. See ASCARIS.

As'ca-ris (ăs'kā-rĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἀσκαρίς an intestinal worm.] 1. Zoöl. A genus of nematode worms, type of a family, Ascaridæ, distinguished by the three-lipped mouth. It includes the common roundworm (A. lumbricoides) parasitic in the human intestines, which resembles an earthworm in size and appearance, and many other species which infest animals. A. megalocephala, a species common in the horse, has been of importance in the study of mitosis, on account of the ease with which its eggs may be preserved and the small number of chromosomes in the mitotic figures. As these worms have no means of attaching themselves to the walls of the intestine, they can easily be expelled by vermifuges. The pinworm also belongs to this family.

2. [l. c.] pl. ASCARIDES (ăs-kăr'ĭ-dēz). An ascarid.

as-cend' (ă-sĕnd'), v. i. ; AS-CEND'ED ; AS-CEND'ING. [L. ascendere ; ad + scandere to climb, mount. See SCAN.] 1. To move upward ; to mount ; to go up ; to rise ; — opposed to descend.

Higher yet that star ascends. Bowring.

I ascend unto my father and your father. John XX. 17.

The smoke of it ascended up to heaven. Addison.

2. To rise, in a figurative sense ; to proceed from an inferior to a superior degree, from mean to noble objects, from particulars to generals, from modern to ancient times, from one note to another of higher pitch, etc. ; as, our inquiries ascend to the remotest antiquity.

Syn. — Rise, mount, climb, soar, tower.

as-cend', v. t. 1. To go or move upward upon or along ; to climb ; to mount ; to go up to the top of ; as, to ascend a hill, a ladder, a tree, a river, a throne.

2. To raise in honor ; to exalt. Obs.

Syn. — ASCEND, MOUNT, CLIMB, SCALE agree in the idea of upward movement. ASCEND (opp to descend) is the most general term ; as, to ascend a mountain, a river, a throne ; "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?" (Ps. XXIV. 3). Ascend and MOUNT are frequently, but not always, interchangeable ; thus one mounts or ascends the platform, the scaffold ; one ascends (not mounts) a mountain ; one mounts (not ascends) a horse. To CLIMB is to ascend with effort ; as, to climb a tree, a hill ; "And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet" (1 Sam. xiv. 13). SCALE implies a steep or difficult climb ; as, to scale a wall, a precipice ; "A ladder quaintly made of cords . . . would serve to scale another Hero's tower" (Shak.). See ASCENT, ASCENDANCY, RISE, FLOAT.

as-cend'ance (ă-sĕn'dăns) } n. Act of ascending ; also, as-

☞ There is practically equal authority for either ascendancy or ascendency ; but in the case of ascendant, ascendent, n. & a., present usage favors the form in -ant.

Syn. — Influence, sway, control, domination, predominance, preponderance, dominion, authority, sovereignty. — ASCENDANCY, SUPREMACY. Ascendancy implies paramount influence ; supremacy, supreme authority or power. See DOMINANT, PRIORITY ; cf. INFLUENCE.

The ascendancy which Spain then had in Europe . . . was an ascendancy which had been gained by unquestioned superiority in all the arts of policy and of war. Macaulay.

As we, under heaven, are supreme head,
So under Him that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shak.

as-cend'ant (-dănt) } n. [F. ascendant, n. & a., L. ascen- as-cend'ent (-dĕnt) } dens, p. pr. of ascendere.] 1. Astrol. The horoscope ; that degree of the ecliptic or sign of the zodiac which rises above the horizon at any given moment, as that of one's birth, — supposed to have a commanding influence on a person's life and fortune. Hence the phrases to be in the ascendant, to have commanding power or influence ; and lord of the ascendant, one who has possession of such power or influence ; as, to rule, for a while, lord of the ascendant.

Sciences that were then in their highest ascendant Temple.

2. Superiority, or commanding influence ; ascendancy ; as, one man has the ascendant over another.

Cluverius had acquired over the mind of the young monarch the ascendant not only of a tutor, but of a parent. Robertson.

3. Ascent ; acclivity, peak. Obs.

4. An ancestor, or one who precedes in genealogical succession ; a relative in the ascending line, whether lineal or collateral ; — opposed to descendant. See CONSANGUINITY.

5. A going back in time or order of genealogical succession.

6. Logic. Passage of thought from a more to a less intensive consideration of a concept, with a consequent gain of extension.

Syn. — ASCENT, ASCENSION. Both words denote the act of ascending, but they differ somewhat in their use. Ascent, not ascension, is the regular term when climbing is referred to; as, the ascent (not the ascension) of a mountain or of a ladder. Either ascent or ascension may denote the movement of that which rises through the air or through space; as, the ascent of vapors from the earth, the ascension (not ascent) of our Lord. Sometimes ascent stresses the mere fact, ascension the action or process of ascending; as, the ascent of a balloon, a balloon ascension. Ascent is also used of an upward slope; as, "David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet" (2 Sam. xv. 30). See ASCEND.

2. The doctrine that the carnal or material world is evil or despicable, and that salvation is to be most certainly obtained by mortification of the flesh.

as'cian (ăsh'yăn), n. [L. ascius, Gr. ἄσκιος without shadow; ἀ- not + σκιά shadow.] One who, at certain times of the year, has no shadow at noon; — applied to the inhabitants of the torrid zone, who have a practically vertical sun for a few days every year.

As-cid'i-a (ă-sĭd'ĭ-ă), n. [NL., fr. ascidium.] Zoöl. A genus of simple ascidians, now restricted to certain typical species, but formerly including all the simple Ascidiacea.

As-cid'i-a'ce-a (-ā'shē-ă; -ā'sē-ă), n. pl. [NL. See ASCIDIUM.] Zoöl. An order of Tunicata. It includes the simple ascidians (As-cid'i-æ sim'pli-ces [ă-sĭd'ĭ-ē sĭm'plĭ-sēz]), or sea squirts (see ASCIDIAN), and the compound ascidians (As-cid'i-æ com-pos'i-tæ [kŏm-pŏz'ĭ-tē]), which differ from the simple ascidians in reproducing by budding, the individuals thus formed remaining connected together and usually becoming embedded in a common investing mass or test.

as-cid'i-an (ă-sĭd'ĭ-ăn), n. Zoöl. 1. Any simple or compound tunicate of the order Ascidiacea; a sea squirt. A typical ascidian is saclike in form, with an anterior branchial or oral opening, and a dorsal atrial one. Entering at the former, the water passes into the branchial sac, whose perforated walls function as gills, and through them into the surrounding atrial chamber, then out at the atrial orifice. The food is drawn in with the water; the esophagus leads from the posterior part of the branchial sac. The central nervous system is reduced to a single dorsal ganglion between the orifices. In contrast to the structure of the adult, the larva shows many vertebrate characters, indicating descent from the same ancestors as the vertebrates. It resembles a minute tadpole, having a tail with a distinct notochord and dorsal neural cord. The individuals thus go through a retrograde metamorphosis, and the history of the group is an example of retrograde evolution.

as-cle'pi-ad (ăs-klē'pĭ-ăd), n. Any asclepiadaceous plant.

As-cle'pi-a-da'ce-æ (-ă-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See ASCLEPIAS.] Bot. A vast family of plants (order Gentianales), mostly with milky juice and irregular flowers adapted to secure cross pollination by insects; the milkweed family. There are about 225 genera and 1900 species of wide distribution. They are herbs or shrubs with umbellate flowers, bearing a corona between the corolla and the stamens, and having the pollen grains adherent in masses. They include a number of ornamental plants, but few of economic value. — as-cle'pi-a-da'ceous (-shŭs), a.

As-cle'pi-a-de'an (-dē'ăn), a. [L. Asclepiadeus, Gr. Ἀσκληπιάδειος.] Of, pertaining to, or designating, a variety of verse, so called after the Greek poet Asclepiades, and occurring in two forms, a shorter and a longer, as follows: a The lesser Asclepiadean, a composite logaœdic verse of two series, a syncopated tripody and a tripody catalectic (-›|~ ~ ›|L ⁜ ~ ›|~ ›|~ ^). See PROSODY. Thus:

b The greater Asclepiadean, a composite logaœdic verse of three series, having the two tripodies of the lesser with a syncopated dipody inserted between (-›|~ ~ ›|L ⁜ ~ ›|L ⁜ ~ ~ ›|~ ›|~ ^). Thus:

Circa | mite so|lum ⁜ Tiburis | et ⁜ mœnia | Catilli.

Some authorities make the Asclepiadean a choriambic verse, consisting of a spondee, two or (in the greater) three choriambi, and an iambus. Thus:

Mæcē|nās ătăvīs ‖ ēdĭtŭs rē|gĭbŭs.

As-cle'pi-a-de'an, n. Pros. An Asclepiadean verse.

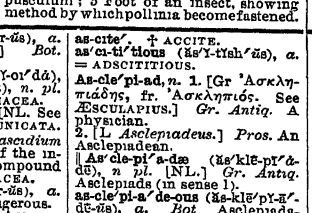
As-cle'pi-as (ăs-klē'pĭ-ăs), n. [L., name of a plant, fr. Gr. ἀσκληπιάς, named fr. Asclepius or Aesculapius.] Bot. A large genus of perennial herbs, chiefly North American, type of the family Asclepiadaceæ. The corona of the flowers consists of five concave hoods, each bearing a slender horn. The mechanism for securing cross pollination is elaborate. Many of the species, as A. tuberosa, the butterfly weed, are showy and ornamental. The flowers are white, pink, purple, yellow, orange, or greenish. A. curassavica is employed in the West Indies as an emetic under the name ipecacuanha. Some East Indian species yield a good fiber.



Asclepias.

1 Flower, side view; 2 Same, enlarged, with two staminal appendages removed; 3 Section of flower; 4 Pollinia and Corpusculum; 5 Foot of an insect, showing method by which pollinia become fastened.

Asclepias butterfly. A large, handsome, red and black butterfly (Anosia plexippus), found in both hemispheres, whose larva feeds on milkweed.

As-cle'pi-us (ăs-klē'pĭ-ŭs), As-kle'pi-os (-ŏs), n. [Gr. Ἀσκληπιός.] Gr. Relig. In Homer, a mortal hero, a physician; later, the god of medicine and healing. Epidauros was the chief seat of his worship, which was introduced into Athens about 420 B. C. (by the poet Sophocles, it is believed), where it probably amalgamated with the cult of an older serpent god of the same function. Asclepius is generally represented as a bearded man with an attendant serpent; cocks were sacrificed to him. It was customary for patients to sleep in the adytum of the god's sanctuary and there to receive oracular dreams, giving the proper treatment or prescription. In Greek myth Asclepius is the son of Apollo and Coronis. The centaur Chiron trained him to such expertness in the healing art that he finally raised the dead; for this Zeus slew him. See ÆSCULAPIUS; cf. APOLLO.

as'co-carp (ăs'kō-kärp), n. [ascus + -carp.] Bot. In ascomycetous fungi, the spherical, discoid, or cup-shaped body within which the asci are collected, and which constitutes the mature fructification. The different forms are known in mycology under distinct names. See ASCOMA, APOTHECIUM, PERITHECIUM. Also called spore fruit.

as-cog'e-nous (ăs-kŏj'ē-nŭs), a. [ascus + -genous.] Bot. Producing asci, — applied to the hyphæ upon which asci are developed.

as'co-gone (ăs'kō-gōn), n. Bot. An ascogonium.

as'co-go'ni-um (-gō'nĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -GONIA (-gō'nĭ-ă). [NL.; ascus + root of Gr. γογνεσθαι to be born.] Bot. The fertilized portion of the archicarp in ascomycetous fungi. b Sometimes, the archicarp itself.

As'co-li-che'nes (-lĭ-kē'nēz), n. pl. [NL.; ascus + Lichenes.] Bot. A class of thallophytes embracing all those lichens in which the fungal element is an ascomycete. Most lichens are of this class. Cf. BASIDIOLICHENES.

as-co'ma (ăs-kō'mă), n.; L. pl. ASCOMATA (ăs-kō'mă-tă; -kŏm'ă-tă). [NL., fr. Gr. ἀσκωμα a leather bellows. See ASCUS.] Bot. The disklike form of ascocarp found in fungi of the order Pezizales and related orders.

as'co-my-cete' (ăs'kō-mĭ-sēt'), n.; pl. -CETES (-sēts; not to be confused with the L. class name AS'CO-MY-CE'TES). Bot. A fungus of the class Ascomycetes.

As'co-my-ce'tes (-sē'tēz), n. pl. [NL.; ascus + -mycetes.] Bot. A large class of higher fungi distinguished by septate hyphæ, and by having their spores formed in asci, or spore sacs. It comprises many orders, among which are the Saccharomycetales (yeasts), Aspergillales (molds), Perisporiales (mildews), Tuberales (truffles), Helvellales (morels, etc.). A'shur (ā'shōor), A'sur (ā'sōor), n. [Assyrian.] Assyrian Myth. The chief deity of the Assyrian pantheon, the god of military prowess and empire. An older form of the name appears, Ashir, signifying "leader, chief." Originally the patron of a city of the same name, eventually his cult became the dominant worship of the whole country (Assyria) which was called after him.

Ashur

Just as in Babylonia the spiritualizing process, which accompanies the development of every religion, leads to the establishment of the doctrine of a triad of gods standing above the gods of the actual pantheon, so in Assyria this process has its outcome in the conception of a single deity who presides over the fate of the country, who marks the genius of the empire established by the Assyrian kings, and who seems to suffice for all the needs of his subjects. This unique position of Ashur was first recognized by Sayce, who goes so far as to express the opinion that, under other circumstances, there might have developed as spiritualistic a faith as marked the growth in Israel of Jahweh from a national to a universal deity. Dict of Bible (Hastings).

His symbol was the winged circle, . . perhaps . . a visible representation that Asur's might had no equal, his influence no limit, and his existence no end. Encyc. Biblica.

He is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself John ix. 21.
He asked the way to Chester Shak.
2. To request; to seek to obtain by words; to petition, solicit; — often with of, in the sense of from, before the person addressed.
Ask counsel, we pray thee, of God. Judg. xviii. 5.
If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. John xv. 7.
3. To require, demand, claim, or expect, whether by way of remuneration or return, or as a matter of necessity; as, what price do you ask?
Ask me never so much dowry. Gen. xxxiv. 12.
To whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more. Luke xii. 48.
4. To publish in church for marriage; — said of both the banns and the persons.
5. To invite; as, to ask one to an entertainment.
Syn. — ASK, REQUEST, BEG come into comparison in the general sense of petitioning. ASK, as here compared, is the generic term; as, "Ask, and it shall be given you" (Matt. vii. 7), to ask a favor. To REQUEST is to ask formally or politely; as, "My master . . . requests your company" (Shak.). BEG implies still more of deference or respect, and as a conventional term of politeness has in a measure displaced both ask and request; as, to beg one's pardon, one's acceptance of a gift, to beg a guest to be seated, a tradesman begs to announce the arrival of new goods. See BEG, INQUIRE.

2. To make inquiry, or seek by request; — sometimes followed by after, for, or about, formerly by of.

As'mo-de'us (ăz'mō-dē'ŭs; ăs'-), n. [L. Asmodaeus, Gr. Ἀσμοδαῖος; cf. Heb. Ashmadai'; prob. fr. Avestan Aeshmadaeva.] In Jewish demonology, an evil spirit, probably the Persian Æshma dæva, demon of anger and lust; later, the king of the demons (as Lilith was their queen), who is sometimes jocularly spoken of as destroying matrimonial happiness.
In the apocryphal book of Tobit he is represented as loving Sara, the daughter of Raguel and Edna, and causing the death of seven husbands on the bridal night. Tobias, instructed by the angel Raphael, burned the heart and liver of a fish that he caught in the Tigris, and the smell drove the demon into Egypt, where Raphael bound him, leaving Tobias and Sara in peace. According to the Testament of Solomon, Asmodeus brought to Solomon's service the magic worm Shamir, whose touch splits stones; he then for a time usurped the throne of Solomon, performing many of the evil deeds attributed to Solomon. Le Sage has made Asmodeus the title character of his "Le Diable Boiteux" ("The Limping Devil, or Devil on Two Sticks"). Asmodeus being fabled to have become lame by breaking his leg. He is released from his prison, a bottle, by Don Cleofas, a young Spanish scholar, whom Asmodeus carries in his flight over Madrid, giving him the power of seeing through the roofs and walls of the houses.

as'pect (ăs'pĕkt, before e 1650 usually, after that less often, as-pect'), n. [L. aspectus, fr. aspicere, aspectum, to look at; ad + spicere, specere, to look, akin to E. spy.] 1. Act of looking at; gaze; glance; regard. Rare.
His aspect was bent on the ground. Scott.
2. Astrol. The situation of planets or stars with respect to one another, or the angle formed by the rays of light proceeding from them and meeting at the eye; the joint look of planets or stars upon each other or upon the earth. The chief aspects which two planets can assume are five: sextile, ⚹, when the planets are 60° apart; quartile, or quadrate, □, when their distance is 90°, or the quarter of a circle, trine, △, when the distance is 120°; opposition, ☍, when the distance is 180°, or half a circle, and conjunction, ☌, when they are in the same longitude. Astrology taught that the aspects of the planets exerted an influence on human affairs for good or evil.
Heaven did afford a gracious aspect,
And joined those stars that shall be opposite,
Even till the dissolution of the world. Marlowe.

as-sault' (ä-sôlt'), n. [ME. asaut, assaut, OF. assaut, asalt, F. assaut, LL. assaltus (L. assultus); L. ad + saltus a leaping, springing, salire to leap. See ASSAIL.] 1. A violent onset or attack with physical means, as blows, weapons, etc.; onslaught; rush or charge of an attacking force; as, an assault upon a man or a fortification.

Unshaken bears the assault Of their most dreaded foe, the strong southwest. Wordsworth.

2. A violent onset or attack with moral or spiritual weapons, as words, arguments, appeals, and the like; as, to make an assault on character, on the prerogatives of a prince, or on the constitution of a government. Clarendon.

3. Law. An apparently violent attempt, or a willful offer with force or violence, to do hurt to another, without the actual doing of the hurt threatened, as by lifting the fist or a cane in a threatening manner. The actual doing of the hurt constitutes a battery. Often loosely used, and regularly used in Scots Law, to include the battery. Neither actual intent nor actual present ability to do the injury threatened is necessary; it is sufficient if the circumstances are such that the person threatened reasonably believes the injury will be done. Assault is both a civil and criminal offense.

4. A bout with foils, broadswords, or similar weapons.

Syn. — Invasion, incursion, descent, onset, storm.

as-sault', v. t.; AS-SAULT'ED; AS-SAULT'ING. [From ASSAULT, n.; cf. OF. assauter, LL. assaltare.] 1. To make an assault upon, as by a sudden rush of armed men; to attack with unlawful or insulting physical violence or menaces.

Insnared, assaulted, overcome, led bound. Milton.

2. To attack with moral means, or in order to produce moral effects; to attack by words, arguments, or unfriendly measures, to assail; as, to assault a reputation. In the latter sense, assail is more common.

3. Fig.: To impinge violently upon; to dash against roughly.

Syn. — Assail, invade, storm, charge. See ATTACK.

as-say' (ă-sā'), n. [OF. asai, essai, trial, F. essai. See ESSAY, n.] 1. Trial; attempt; essay. Obs. Chaucer.

I am withal persuaded that it may prove much more easy in the assay than it now seems at distance. Milton.

☞ Assay and essay are radically the same word; but modern usage has appropriated assay chiefly to experiments in metallurgy, etc., and essay to intellectual and bodily efforts

SENT, CONSENT. ASSENT implies primarily an act of the understanding, and applies to opinions or propositions; as, "To assent to [a proposition] is to acquiesce in it as true" (J. H. Newman); "One was convinced and believed and assented" (D. Webster). CONSENT involves the will or the feelings, and denotes compliance with what is requested or desired; as, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not" (Prov. i. 10). But neither assent nor consent necessarily implies approval. Assent may also apply to actions or proposals which involve a less degree of interest or feeling than consent; as, a lady may assent to a gentleman's opening the window; but if he makes a proposal of marriage, he must await her consent. See AGREE, ACCEDE.

2 Physiol. The conversion or incorporation of nutritive material into the fluid or solid substance of the body. It is the last stage or series of stages in the process of nutrition, following after digestion and absorption, or more or less simultaneous with the latter. In its strictest sense assimilation is synonymous with anabolism or constructive metabolism. In botany it was formerly applied almost exclusively to the process of carbon dioxide absorption and carbon fixation now called photosynthesis (which see). It is now used of the incorporation of food materials into the protoplasm, as in animal physiology. See METABOLISM.

3. Phon. Conformation of a sound, usually a consonant, to a neighboring sound. Assimilation is partial, as in the change of the labial nasal m to the dental nasal n before the dental t in ant, from AS. æm(e)te; or complete, as in announce from Lat. annuntiare (ad + nuntiare). It is progressive when the first of two sounds is assimilated to the second, regressive when the second is assimilated to the first.

as-sim'i-la-tive (ă-sĭm'ĭ-lă-tĭv), a. [Cf. LL. assimilativus, F. assimilatif.] Tending to, or characterized by, assimilation; that assimilates or causes assimilation; as, an assimilative process or substance.

Provisions are often made by statute for suit by and against such associations.

4. Chem. Aggregation, as of molecules, to form loosely bound complexes; as, abnormally small lowering of the freezing point of a solution is attributed to the association of the molecules of the solute. Such complexes are disintegrated by heat and in other ways.

Syn. — ASSOCIATION, SOCIETY, CLUB agree in the idea of a body of persons united in the interest of a common object. ASSOCIATION and SOCIETY are practically interchangeable; as, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Christian Endeavor Society, the American Historical Association, the Philological Society. Frequently, however, association suggests a somewhat larger inclusiveness than society, whether with regard to the objects of the organization or to the persons admitted to membership. A CLUB is usually a more private body than either of the others, and is often purely social; as, the Roxburghe Club, the Century Club. See COMBINATION, ALLIANCE.

association of ideas, Psychol., the combination or connection of states of mind or their objects with one another, as the result of which the appearance in consciousness of one is followed or accompanied by the appearance of those associated with it. The relations according to which they are thus connected or revived are called the laws of association. These laws are differently stated by different psychologists, but prominent among them are reckoned association by similarity, or resemblance of ideas, and by contiguity, or relations of time and place.

6. Logic. To add as an assumption or minor premise.
Syn. — Put on, counterfeit, sham. — ASSUME, AFFECT, PRETEND, SIMULATE, FEIGN agree in implying false or deceptive appearances. To ASSUME (as here compared) is to take to one's self in appearance only (see USURP); as, "It sometimes happens that by assuming an air of cheerfulness we become cheerful in reality" (Cowper). To AFFECT is to make a show of possessing, usually for effect; as, to affect plainness of speech; "To affect a gesture, an opinion, a phrase, because it is the rage with a large number of persons" (Hazlitt); "Jones had really that taste for humor which others affect" (Fielding). PRETEND implies overt profession of what is false; as, to pretend to be insane. To SIMULATE (see SIMULATION) is to assume the appearance or characteristics of something else; as, to simulate insanity (by imitating its signs). FEIGN implies more invention than pretend, less specific counterfeiting than simulate; as, to feign madness (by a fictitious representation). But feign and simulate are often interchangeable. See AFFECTATION; cf. POSTULATE, ASSUMPTION.
A man of real modesty, who assumes an air of impudence — who, while his heart beats with anxiety, studies ease and affects good humor. Goldsmith

2. [cap.] Bot. A genus of herbaceous plants, type of the family Asteraceæ, distinguished by having heads with both discoid and radiate flowers, a uniseriate involucre, and a pappus of capillary bristles also in a single series. The species probably exceed 250; they are natives of temperate regions, being esp. abundant throughout the United States, and containing white-, purple-, or pink-rayed types.

3. a Any plant of the genus Aster or its immediate allies. b Any of the well-known garden plants derived from the related plant Callistephus hortensis, as the China aster, German aster, etc. See CALLISTEPHUS.

4. Biol. a A star-shaped figure of achromatic substance found chiefly in cells dividing by mitosis; a cytaster. It consists of a central mass, the centrosphere or attraction sphere, which in animal and some plant cells often contains a centrosome, and radiating fibers called the aster rays. The typical mitotic figure or amphiaster contains two such asters. See MITOSIS, Illust. b Less frequently, the group of chromosomes during mitosis when arranged in a star-shaped figure; the karyaster.

5. Zoöl. A star-shaped spicule.

-as'ter. A suffix from Greek ἀστήρ, star; as, diaster, karyaster, micraster.

As'ter-a'ce-æ (ăs'tẽr-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of plants typifying the order Asterales; the aster, or thistle, family. It is the largest and most highly developed family of seed plants, comprising not less than 780 genera and 10,000 species of world-wide distribution. From other families of the composite type it is distinguished by the syngenesious stamens and by having some or all of the florets in the head tubular instead of radiate. The largest and most representative genera are Vernonia, Eupatorium, Aster, Solidago, Helianthus, Coreopsis, Chrysanthemum, Senecio, and Centaurea. Many other genera contain species cultivated for ornament, and a few yield edible vegetables. This family was formerly, and is still often, included in the old order or family Compositæ. See COMPOSITÆ. — as'ter-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

As'ter-a'les (-ā'lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. An order of metachlamydeous dicotyledonous plants consisting of the three families Asteraceæ, Ambrosiaceæ, and Cichoriaceæ; the so-called composites. See COMPOSITÆ.

as-te'ri-a (ăs-tē'rĭ-ȧ), n. [L., a precious stone, fr. Gr. ἀστέριος starry, fr. ἀστήρ star.] An asteriated stone mentioned by Pliny, — perhaps asteriated sapphire.

As-te'ri-as (-ăs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἀστερίας starred.] Zoöl. A genus of echinoderms formerly comprising nearly all starfishes and ophiurans, but now restricted to certain typical starfishes, including many common shore starfishes.

as-te'ri-at'ed (ăs-tē'rĭ-āt'ĕd), a. [See ASTERIAS.] Exhibiting asterism. See ASTERISM, 3.

2. Zoöl. One of the Asteroidea.

as'ter-oi'dal (-oi'dăl), a. Of or pertaining to an asteroid or the asteroids.

As'ter-oi'de-a (-dē-ȧ), n. pl. [NL., fr. asteroid.] Zoöl. The class of echinoderms consisting of the starfishes. They are characterized by being unattached, having a star-shaped or pentagonal body, the rays or arms (usually five in number) hollow and containing prolongations of the cœlom and alimentary and other viscera. The skeleton consists of calcareous plates and ossicles somewhat loosely united, often allowing the arms great freedom of movement. The mouth is on the lower surface, and is not provided with jaws or teeth; there is an aboral madreporic plate; the anus is often wanting or functionless, undigested matter being thrown out at the mouth. Locomotion is by means of rows of tube feet or suckers, which arise from a furrow on the lower surface of each arm. In old classifications the ophiurians were also included. See STARFISH, Illust. — as'ter-oi'de-an (-ăn), a. & n.

as'tro-labe (ăs'trō-lāb), n. [ME. astrolabe, astrolabie, astrĭlabe, OF. astrelabe, F. astrolabe, or LL. astrolabium, fr. Gr. ἀστρολάβον; ἄστρον star + λαμβάνειν, λαβεῖν, to take.] 1. Astron. A compact instrument for observing the positions of the heavenly bodies. Among the ancients it was often essentially the armillary sphere. A graduated circle with sights, for taking altitudes at sea, was called an astrolabe in the 18th century. It is now superseded by the sextant.

Astroid P Generating point of circle A B, which revolves within the large circle.

2. A stereographic projection of the sphere on the plane of a great circle, as the equator or meridian; a planisphere.
as-trol'o-ger (ăs-trŏl'ō-jĕr), n. [See ASTROLOGY.] 1. One who studies the stars; an astronomer; hence, the cock, as announcing daybreak. Obs. Chaucer.
2. One who practices astrology; one who professes to foretell events by the aspects and situation of the stars.
as'tro-log'ic (ăs'trō-lŏj'ĭk) } a. [Gr. ἀστρολογικός: cf. F.
as'tro-log'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } astrologique.] Of or pertaining to astrology; professing or practicing astrology. "Astrologic learning." Hudibras. "Astrological prognostication." Cudworth. — as'tro-log'i-cal-ly, adv.
as-trol'o-gize (ăs-trŏl'ō-jīz), v. t. & i. To apply astrology to; to study or practice astrology.
as-trol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [F. astrologie, L. astrologia, fr. Gr. ἀστρολογία, fr. ἀστρολόγος astronomer, astrologer; ἄστρον star + λόγος discourse, λεγειν to speak. See STAR.] In its etymological signification, the science of the stars; among the ancients, synonymous with astronomy; subsequently, the pseudo science which treats of the influences of the stars upon human affairs, and of foretelling terrestrial events by their position and aspects. Astrology formerly enjoyed general acceptance, having been practiced by the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Arabs, etc. It flourished in Europe as late as the 17th century, though it was most in vogue during the 14th and 15th. Natural astrology, which is concerned with the prediction of events in inanimate nature, was in part legitimate astronomical science; but it was regarded as subsidiary to judicial, or mundane, astrology, which assumes to foretell the fate and acts of nations and individuals. Astrology thus became the parent of modern astronomy, as alchemy of chemistry, by furnishing a powerful motive for the study of natural phenomena. See HOROSCOPE.
as'tro-me'te-or-ol'o-gy (-mē'tē-ŏr-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [astro- + meteorology.] Investigation of the supposed relation between the heavenly bodies and the weather. — as'tro-me'te-or'o-log'i-cal (-ŏr'ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — as'tro-me'te-or-ol'o-gist (-ŏr-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n.
as-trom'e-ter (ăs-trŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [astro- + -meter.] An instrument for measuring the light of stars; specif., an arrangement of prism and lens invented by Sir John Herschel for determining the brightness of stars by comparison with a natural standard, as the moon.
as-trom'e-try (-trĭ), n. [astro- + -metry.] The measurement of the apparent magnitudes of stars.
as-tron'o-mer (ăs-trŏn'ō-mĕr), n. [See ASTRONOMY.] 1. An astrologer. Obs. Shak.
2. One versed in astronomy; one having a knowledge of the laws and phenomena of the heavenly bodies.
as'tro-nom'ic (ăs'trō-nŏm'ĭk), a. Astronomical.
as'tro-nom'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [L. astronomicus, Gr. ἀστρονομικός: cf. F. astronomique.] Of or pertaining to astronomy; in accordance with the methods or principles of astronomy. — as'tro-nom'i-cal-ly, adv.
astronomical clock. a A clock of superior construction, with a compensating pendulum, etc., to measure time with great accuracy, for use in astronomical observatories; — called a sidereal clock when regulated to keep sidereal time, and a mean-time clock when regulated to keep mean time. The latter is often called a regulator when used by watchmakers as a standard for regulating ordinary timepieces. b A clock with mechanism for indicating certain astronomical phenomena, as the phases of the moon, position of the sun in the ecliptic, equation of time, etc. — a. day, a period equal to the mean solar day, but beginning at noon instead of at midnight, its twenty-four hours being numbered from 1 to 24; also, the sidereal day, as that most used by astronomers. — a. fractions. See under SEXAGESIMAL. — a. geography, that part of mathematical geography which treats of the earth in its relation to the other heavenly bodies. — a. telescope, a telescope having a simple eyepiece, and exhibiting objects inverted. See TELESCOPE, Illust. — a. time, mean solar time reckoned by counting the hours continuously up to twenty-four from one noon to the next. — a. unit, a unit used in astronomy; specif., a unit of length equal to the mean radius of the earth's orbit. — a. year See YEAR.
as-tron'o-my (ăs-trŏn'ō-mĭ), n. [ME. astronomie, F. astronomie, L. astronomia, fr. Gr. ἀστρονομια, fr. ἀστρονόμος astronomer; ἄστρον star + νέμειν to distribute, regulate. See STAR; NOMAD.] The science which treats of the heavenly bodies, of their magnitudes, motions, distances, constitution, etc.; — anciently synonymous with astrology. Also, a treatise on this science. Astronomy treats of the earth only in its relations to the heavenly bodies, leaving the study of its configuration, constitution, etc., to the special earth sciences, as geography and geology. It is the oldest of sciences, having been utilized from remote ages in the formation of calendars, prediction of eclipses, etc. The modern science dates from the replacement of the Ptolemaic system by the Copernican system (see these terms). During the 16th–18th centuries the mechanics of the solar system was admirably worked out, chiefly by Tycho Brahe (1546–1601), Kepler (1571–1630), Galileo (1564–1642), Newton (1642–1727), and Laplace (1749–1827). The most remarkable recent advances have been in astrophysics (which see). See CONSTELLATION, SIGN, SOLAR SYSTEM, TELESCOPE, ZODIAC, etc., and ARBITRARY SIGNS, Appen.

As'tro-phel (ăs'trō-fĕl), n. 1. The name used for himself by Sir Philip Sidney in his sonnets, "Astrophel and Stella."
2. The elegy written by Spenser on the death of Sidney.
as'tro-phel. † ASTROPEL.
as'tro-phil, n. [astro- + -phil] One fond of star lore; an amateur astronomer.

as'tro-pho-tog'ra-phy (ăs'trō-fō-tŏg'rā-fĭ), n. [astro- + photography.] The application of photography to astronomical ends. By photography eclipses, sun spots, spectra, etc., are studied, new asteroids discovered, and vast numbers of otherwise invisible stars and nebulæ accurately charted. This last is made possible by the cumulative effect, during long exposure, of light too faint to be visible to the eye.

as'tro-pho-tom'e-try (-trĭ), n. Astron. The determination of the brightness of stars, and also of the sun, moon, and planets. — as'tro-pho'to-met'ri-cal (-fō'tō-mĕt'rĭ-kăl), a.

as'tro-phyl'lite (-fĭl'līt), n. [astro- + Gr. φύλλον leaf + -ite.] Min. A titano-silicate (chiefly of sodium, potassium, iron, and manganese) of yellowish color and submetallic or pearly luster. Its crystals sometimes occur in stellate groups. It is laminated like mica. H., 3. Sp. gr., 3.3–3.4.

as'tro-phys'i-cal (-fĭz'ĭ-kăl), a. Pertaining to astrophysics.

as'tro-phys'ics (-fĭz'ĭks), n. [astro- + physics.] That science, a branch of astronomy, which has to do with the physical and chemical constitution of the heavenly bodies; — called also celestial or cosmical physics, and the new astronomy. Researches in astrophysics are made with the photometer, spectroscope, bolometer, etc., usually in connection with the telescope. — as'tro-phys'i-cist (-ĭ-sĭst), n.

As-troph'y-ton (ăs-trŏf'ĭ-tŏn), n. [astro- + Gr. φυτόν plant.] Zoöl. A genus of ophiurans (called basket fishes), of the order Euryalida, having the arms much branched.

as'tro-sphere (ăs'trō-sfēr), n. [astro- + sphere.] Biol. a The central mass of the aster exclusive of the rays; the centrosphere. b The entire aster exclusive of the centrosome; the astral sphere. See ASTER, n., 4 a.

as'tro-the-ol'o-gy (-thē-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [astro- + theology.] Theology founded on observation of celestial bodies.

a-strut' (ā-strŭt'), a. & adv. 1. Sticking out, or puffed out; swelling; in a swelling manner. Archaic.

Inflated and astrut with self-conceit. Cowper.

2. In a strutting manner; with a strutting gait.

As'tur (ăs'tŭr), n. [L., a species of hawk.] Zoöl. A genus or subgenus consisting of the goshawks. See GOSHAWK, Illust.

As-tu'ri-an (ăs-tū'rĭ-ăn), a. [Sp. asturiano.] Of or pertaining to Asturias, previous to 1833 a division of northern Spain, but now comprised in the province of Oviedo. At the time of the Saracen invasion Asturias became a refuge for the Goths who eventually, by conquest, founded the kingdom of Leon — n. A Spaniard of Asturias.

as-tute' (ăs-tūt'), a. [L astutus, fr. astus craft, cunning.] Critically discerning; sagacious; shrewd; subtle; crafty.

Syn. — Keen, penetrating, skilled, discriminating, cunning, sagacious, subtle, wily, crafty. See SHREWD.

As-ty'a-nax (ăs-tī'ā-năks), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἀστυάναξ.] Gr. Myth. The son of Hector and Andromache, less often called by his proper name Scamandrius. He was hurled by the Greeks from the walls of Troy, that he might not restore the kingdom, as predicted by Calchas. Another story is that he was carried away from Troy, with his mother, by Neoptolemus, whom he succeeded as king of Epirus.

a-sun'der (ā-sŭn'dĕr), adv. [a- on + sunder; AS. on sundran.] Apart; separate from each other; into parts; in two; separately; into or in different pieces or places.

I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder. Zech. xi. 10.

as'u-ra (ăs'ōō-rā), n. [Skr. asura.] Hindu Myth. In the oldest parts of the Rig-Veda, a god or spirit; later, in a reverse sense, an evil spirit or demon; an enemy of the gods, or devas. Cf. AHURA.

As'vins (ăs'vĭnz; ăsh'-), n. pl. [Skr. Açvin, sing.] Vedic Myth. Two gods of the dawn, twin brothers, young and beautiful, capable of assuming many forms, said to be sons of a nymph by the sun. They are the physicians of heaven and benefactors of mankind. Cf. DIOSCURI.

a-sy'lum (ā-sī'lŭm), n.; pl. E. -LUMS (-lŭmz), L. -LA (-lă). [L. asylum, Gr. ἄσυλον, fr. ἄσυλος exempt from spoliation, inviolable; ἀ- not + σῦλον right of seizure.] 1. A sanctuary or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter, and from which they could not be forcibly taken without sacrilege. The name was anciently given to temples, altars, statues of the gods, and the like. In later times Christian churches were treated as asylums in the same sense.

2. In international law, a place exempted by custom or convention from the territorial jurisdiction of a state within which it is, so that refugees may not be followed to or taken from it except by the consent of the state enjoying the immunity. Cf. EXTERRITORIALITY.

3. The protection or inviolability afforded by such a place (as defined in 1 or 2), or the act of affording it.

4. Any place of retreat and security.

Earth has no other asylum for them than its own cold bosom. Southey.

5. An institution for the protection or relief of some class of destitute, unfortunate, or afflicted persons; as, an asylum for the aged or the blind, a lunatic asylum.

as'ym-met'ri-cal (-mĕt'rĭ-kăl) } See ASYMMETRY.] 1. Not symmetrical. Specif.: Bot a Not isobilateral. b Zygomorphic; — applied to a flower or to a corolla.

2. Cryst. Of, pert. to, or designating, the system (the triclinic) having no plane of symmetry, or the group of this system having neither plane, axis, nor center of symmetry.

3. Org. Chem. Specif.: Pertaining to or designating derivatives of benzene in which three or four substituting groups are attached unsymmetrically to the nucleus, occupying the positions 1, 2, 4, or 1, 2, 3, 5. See BENZENE NUCLEUS. Abbr., a.

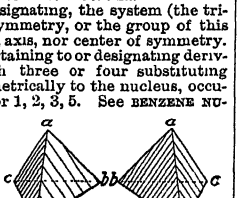
asymmetric carbon atom, Org. Chem., a carbon atom in union with four atoms or groups no two of which are alike. Compounds containing such a carbon atom often occur in two varieties which are distinguished by being respectively levorotatory and dextrorotatory (see POLARIZATION), and also, in some cases, by showing crystal forms related like left-handed and right-handed gloves (enantiomorphous). This particular kind of isomerism is explained by taking into account, not merely the order in which the atoms are united to one another, but also their arrangement in space, whence the origin of stereoisomerism. See Illust. See also ISOMERISM, TARTARIC ACID. — a. conductor, Elec., a conductor which conducts the current more readily in a certain direction than in the reverse.



Asymmetric Carbon Atom The two tetrahedrons illustrate the two ways in which four different atoms or groups, a, b, c, d, may be arranged symmetrically about a central carbon atom The central atom is called asymmetric because the groups on the two figures cannot be brought into the same relative positions by any kind of rotation.

a-sym'me-try (ā-sĭm'ē-trĭ), n. [Gr. ἀσυμμετρία; ἀ- not + συμμετρία symmetry.] Want of symmetry; specif.: a Math. Incommensurability. Obs. b Want of proportion between the parts of a thing, esp. want of bilateral symmetry. c Lack of coördination of two parts moving in connection with one another; as, asymmetry of convergence of the eyes.

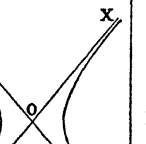
as'ymp-tote (ăs'ĭm-tōt), n. [Gr. ἀσύμπτωτος not falling together; ἀ- not + συμπιπτειν to fall together; σύν with + πιπτειν to fall. Cf. SYMPTOM.] Math. A line that approaches nearer to some curve than any assignable distance, but, though infinitely extended, would never meet it. Asymptotes may be straight lines or curves. A rectilinear asymptote may be conceived as a tangent to the curve at an infinite distance.



SOX, TOY, Asymptotes to the Hyperbola.

as'ymp-tot'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } pert. to, or of the nature of, an asymptote. — as'ymp-tot'i-cal-ly, adv.

a-syn'ar-tete' (ā-sĭn'ăr-tēt'), a. [Gr. ἀσυνάρτητος not connected.] Not connected; not fitted; — used, Gr. & Lat. Pros, with reference to a verse consisting of two cola or rhythmical series to denote: a Having different rhythms in the two members. b Having the two members quasi independent, so that hiatus or syllaba anceps occurs at the cæsura. — a-syn'ar-tet'ic (-tĕt'ĭk), a.

a-syn'de-ton (ā-sĭn'dē-tŏn), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἀσύνδετον, fr. ἀσυνδετος unconnected; ἀ- not + σύνδετος bound together. See SYNDETIC.] Rhet. A figure that omits the connective; as, I came, I saw, I conquered; — opposed to polysyndeton.

as'y-ner'gi-a (ăs'ĭ-nûr'jĭ-ā), n. [NL. See A- not; SYNERGY.] Med. Lack of coördination, as of muscles.

a-syn'ga-my (ā-sĭn'gă-mĭ), n. [a- not + syngamy.] Bot. The incapacity of two species or individuals to accomplish cross pollination because of development of their flowers at different periods. — as'yn-gam'ic (ăs'ĭn-găm'ĭk), a.

As'yn-jur (ăs'ĭn-yōōr), n. pl.; sing. ASYNJA (-yă), ASYNJE (-yā). [Icel. ásynjur, pl. of ásynja, fem. of áss god.] Norse Myth. The goddesses of Asgard, associates of the Æsir, and distinguished from the Vanir goddesses. Most of these goddesses are of minor importance. Cf. EIR, FRIGG, GEFJON, IDUN, NANNA, SAGA, SIF, SKATHI; see ÆSIR.

a-sys'to-le (ā-sĭs'tō-lē), n. [a- not + systole.] Physiol. A weakening or cessation of the contractile power of the heart. — as'ys-tol'ic (ăs'ĭs-tŏl'ĭk), a. — a-sys'to-lism (ā-sĭs'tō-lĭz'm), n.

at (ăt), prep. [AS. set; akin to OHG. az, Goth., OS., & Icel. at, Sw. åt, Dan. & L. ad.] Primarily, this word expresses the relation of presence or contact in space or time, or of direction towards. It has much the sense of to without its implication of motion, and is less definite than in, on, by, etc. Thus, at the house, may be in or near the house. From its original import are derived various uses to express. — 1. Simple presence in, on, or by, or contiguity to, — designating specif.: a The point or place where a thing is, or occurs; as, at the center; at home; at hand; at the door; at sea and on land. At emphasizes mere locality; in refers more to the interior of something or to the idea of inclusiveness. See Syn., below. At sometimes designates a more practical contact with a place than in, by, etc.; as, at school; at the helm. b Simple contact with a person: in the presence, or, fig., in the sight or estimation of. Obs. c Presence in an occurrence or event; as, at the wedding. d Location of a feeling, quality, etc.; as, sick at heart; out at the elbows.

2. A point or position directed towards or attained; — esp. with verbs of motion: a Location through or by which anything passes. "Enter ye in at the strait gate." Matt. vii. 13. b = TO, without special implication. Obs. or Dial. "To come at the holy altar." W. Watson. c Personal contact: into the presence of. Obs., except with implied aggressiveness; as, his creditor is at him again. "He commanded none should come at him." Shak. d Position attained over intervening space or difficulty; as, to arrive or land at a point. Syn. — AT, IN. When reference to the interior of any place is made prominent, IN is used: when a place is regarded as a mere local point, AT is more commonly employed; as, to look for a book in the library, to meet a friend at the library; "He appointed regular meetings of the States of England twice a year in London" (Hume); "An English king was crowned at Paris" (Macaulay). In is used before the names of countries or districts and (usually) of large cities, as, we live in America, in New York, in the South. At is commonly employed before names of houses, institutions, villages, small towns; as, Milton was educated at Christ's College, money collected at the customhouse, I saw him at the jeweler's, we live at Concord. But with names of towns and cities usage varies greatly. In regard to time, we say at the hour, on the day, in the year; as, at 9 o'clock in the morning, on July 5th, in the year 1775. at after, or often after, after. Obs. or Dial. — at all, at large, at last, at length, at once, etc. See under ALL, LARGE, LAST, etc. — at home. -ate (-āt; -ăt; see note below). [From L. -atus, the p. p. ending of 1st conj. verbs.] A suffix used to form: 1. Participial adjectives equivalent to those formed by the ending -ed; as in desol*ate*, sed*ate*, innn*ate*, ornn*ate*, temper*ate*. Causative verbs are formed from such adjectives, and formerly the adjective was often used as the past participle.

2. Verbs (formed on the analogy of causative verbs from adjectives in -ate) by Englishing Latin verbs of the 1st conjugation, as in fascin*ate*, vener*ate*, concentr*ate*, etc., or by adding the suffix to Latin, or sometimes other elements where no corresponding Latin verb exists; as in felici*tate*, capaci*tate*, camphor*ate*.

3. a Participial nouns; as, leg*ate*, one deputed, mand*ate*, something commanded, precipi*tate*, something thrown down. b Chem. Names of the salts and esters formed from those acids whose names end in -ic (except a few whose names begin with hydro-, as hydrocyanic, hydriodic); as, sulph*ate* from sulphur*ic* acid, nitr*ate* from nitr*ic* acid, etc. It is also used in the case of a few other compounds; as, alcohol*ate*.

4. [L. -atus, not the participle ending.] Nouns denoting office or function, or the persons having it; as, tribun*ate*, marquis*ate*, episcop*ate*.

5. Petrog. See PETROGRAPHY.

☞ Verbs in -ate tend to take the accent on the antepenult, which is the historical accent when the -ate is preceded by a single consonant or by a mute and a liquid; as in ac-cel'er-ate, as'pi-rate, con'se-crate, fas'ci-nate, etc. When the -ate, however, is preceded by two consonants not a mute and a liquid, or by more than two consonants, the historical accent has usually been on the penult, as in contem'plate, confis'cate, compen'sate, al'ternate, enervate, illustrate, demonstrate, etc., but many such verbs have, through analogy, become accented on the antepenult, as com'pen-sate, dem'on-strate, etc., while in others, as enervate, illustrate, usage varies, the tendency toward antepenultimate accent not having fully worked itself out.

at'e-lec'ta-sis (ăt'ē-lĕk'tə-sĭs), n. [NL.; atelo- + Gr. ἔκτασις extension.] Med. Pulmonary collapse; also, defective expansion of the pulmonary alveoli at birth. — at'e-lec-tat'ic (-lĕk-tăt'ĭk), a.

A-the'na (ə-thē'nə), A-the'ne (-nē), n. [Gr. Ἀθήνη.] Gr. Relig. One of the greater Olympian deities, preëminent as a civic goddess, wise in the industries of peace and the arts of war; — by the Romans identified with Minerva (which see). Primitively she appears as a patron deity, notably of Athens, where, as Ath'e-na'a (ath'ē-nī'ə) [Gr. Ἀθηναία], she is sometimes distinguished from the more general Athena. It was especially as the tutelary of Athens that she came to be viewed as the characteristic divinity of Greek genius, in its artistic and intellectual aspects. Athenian festivals in her honor were the Panathenæa, and also the Plynteria and Kallynteria (which see). Among her special forms are A-the'na A'le-a (ā'lē-ə), by some considered as a light (sun or moon), by some as a birth, goddess; A. Hy'gi-ei'a (hī'jĭ-ī'ə), a health goddess, associated with Asclepius at Athens; A. Hip'pi-a (hĭp'ĭ-ə), tamer of the horse; A. Ar-ei'a (ə-rī'ə), goddess of war; A. Ni'ke (nī'kē), of victory (see NIKE); A. Er-ga'ne (ûr-gā'nē), patroness of the arts, esp. weaving; A. I-to'ni-a (ī-tō'nĭ-ə), tutelary of Coronea, meeting place of the Panboeotian confederacy; A. Ap'a-tu'ri-a (see APATURIA); etc. As A. Pol'i-as (pŏl'ĭ-ăs), goddess of the city's life, she was the incarnation of law and civic virtue; as A. Parthenos (see below), the virgin goddess, she was supreme at Athens, her temple being the Parthenon; on the Acropolis also was placed the great bronze image of A Prom'a-chos (prŏm'ə-kŏs), the goddess who fights in front, purchased by the citizens with spoils of Marathon. Her poetical name Pallas, or Pallas Athene, is probably associated with her worship in the Attic district of Pallene or with her slaying of the giant Pallas (which see). Her primitive idols, guarding the heights of cities, were called Palladia (see PALLADIUM). In Greek mythology Athena is said to have sprung from the head of Zeus, who, according to some accounts, swallowed her mother Metis. From the river or lake Triton or Tritonis, claimed as the scene of her birth, she is called A. Tri'to-ge-nei'a (trĭ'tō-jē-nī'ə). In Attic myth Athena is said to have contested with Poseidon for supremacy by a trial of useful creative power; Poseidon produced the horse (or a salt spring), Athena the olive tree in the Erechtheum. The latter was considered the greater boon. Athena is represented sometimes as fully armed, with spear and shield, sometimes with a distaff in one hand. Her common attributes are the serpent, the owl (from which is probably derived her epithet Glaucopis), and the ægis, with the gorgoneum (see ÆGIS). See OLYMPIAN; cf. ERECHTHEUS.

at'lee } risk salt tree (Tamarix articulata), of western Asia and India. From this and related species are obtained atlee galls, used for the same purposes as nut galls.

At'li (ăt'lē), n. [Icel. Atli Attila.] In the Volsunga Saga, a monarch, corresponding to Etzel in the Nibelungenlied, who marries Gudrun and invites her brothers to his court, where they are treacherously slain. Gudrun avenges them by killing her own and Atli's two sons and Atli himself.

at'lo- (ăt'lō-). A combining form used in anatomy, medicine, etc., to indicate connection with, or relation to, the atlas ; as, at'lo-ax'oid, pertaining to the atlas and axis ; at'lo-o-don'toid, pertaining to the atlas and odontoid.

A-the'ne (ā-thē'nē). See ATHENA. [Bib.]

Ath'e-no'bi-us (ăth'ē-nō'bĭ-ŭs). ATHANOR.

ather † ADDER, EITHER.

Ath'e-ric'er-a (ăth'ē-rĭs'ĕr-ă), n. pl. [NL. ; Gr. ἀθήρ the awn of grain + κέρας horn.] Zool. A suborder of Diptera, having three basal joints to the antennæ, and a bristle arising from the base of the third. The larval skin serves as a covering for the pupa. — ath'e-ric'er-an (-ăn), a. & n. — ath'e-ric'er-ous (-ŭs), a.

A-the'ri-o-gæ'a (ā-thē'rĭ-ō-jē'ă), n. [NL. ; a- not + Gr. θηρίον beast + γαῖα, γῆ, land ; — from the scarcity of mammals.] Zoögeog. = ANTARCTOGÆA. — A-the'ri-o-gæ'an or -ge'an (-ăn), a.

a-ther'mic (ā-thûr'mĭk), a. a Heatless ; as, an athermic motor. b Med Afebrile.

a-ther'mous (-mŭs), a. [Gr. ἄθερμος without warmth.] Physics. Athermanous.

ath'er-oid (ăth'ĕr-oid), a [Gr. ἀθήρ, ἀθέρος, a beard, or an ear, of grain + -oid.] Shaped like an ear of grain.

Ath'er-o-sper'ma (ăth'ĕr-ō-spûr'mă), n. [NL. ; Gr. ἀθήρ, ἀθερος, a beard, or an ear, of grain + σπερμα seed.] Bot A genus of monimiaceous trees of Victoria and Tasmania. A. moschatum, the only species, is the plume nutmeg.

ath'er-o-sper'mine (-mĭn ; -mēn), n. Also -min. Chem. An alkaloid found in the bark of Atherosperma moschatum.

A-ther'sa-tha (ā-thûr'sā-thă). D. Bib.

Ath'er-ton gag (ăth'ĕr-t'n). U. S. Hist. A resolution that all petitions on the subject of slavery should be "laid on the table without being debated, printed, or referred," introduced in the House of Representatives by C. G. Atherton of New Hampshire, passed in 1838, and rescinded in 1845.

Ath'e-ru'rus (ăth'ē-rōō'rŭs), n. [NL. ; Gr. ἀθήρ beard (of grain) + οὐρά tail.] Zool. See BRUSH-TAILED PORCUPINE.

ath'le-tism (ăth'lē-tĭz'm), n. State or practice of an athlete ; characteristics of an athlete.

Ath-lone' (ăth-lōn'), n. [Name of a borough in Ireland.] Her. See PURSUIVANT.

ath'lo-thete (ăth'lō-thēt), n. [Gr. ἀθλοθέτης a judge, in games.] = AGONOTHETE.

atholte. Obs. pret. of ATHINK.

at-hold', v. t. [ME. at-, AS. æt-, away, from + AS. healdan ; cf. AS. oðhealdan. See HOLD.] To withhold ; detain ; retain ; preserve ; to keep in mind, observe Obs. [HATHOR.]

A'thos' (ā'thŏs'), n. See THREE MUSKETEERS, THE.

a-thrill', adv. Thrilling.

athrust, athurst † ATHIRST.

Ath'tar (ăth'tar), n. The chief divinity of the ancient Minæans, probably a sun deity.

a-thym'i-a (*a-*thĭm'ĭ-a ; -thĭ'mĭ-ă), ath'y-my (ăth'ĭ-mĭ), n. [NL. athymia, fr. Gr. ἀθυμία despondency.] Med Despondency ; melancholia. — a-thy'mic (*a-*thĭ'mĭk, -thĭm'ĭk), a.

atir. † ATTER, ATTIRE.

a-tis' (*a-*tēs'), n. [Hind. atīs.] Bot A kind of monkshood (Aconitum heterophyllum) found in the Himalayas.

atise. † ATTICE.

At'ka. See ALEUT.

At'kin-son, Sergeant. In Fielding's "Amelia," a good-hearted, self-sacrificing soldier, devoted to Booth and Amelia.

At'kin-son cy'cle. Gas Engines A modification of the Otto cycle having long expansion and short compression strokes produced by a special linkwork gear (invented by one Atkinson, an Englishman) which varies the piston speed.

At'kins, Tommy. See TOMMY ATKINS.

Atl Abbr. Atlantic

at-lan'tare' (ăt-lăn'târ'), n. See PETROGRAPHY

At-lan'tes (ăt-lăn'tēz), or, Ital. form, At-lan'te (ăt-lan'tā), n. In Boiardo's "Orlando Innamorato" and Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," a magician who lived in an enchanted castle having a surrounding wall of glass, and who brought up Rugiero.

At-lan'to-Me'di-ter-ra'ne-an race. = LITTORAL RACE

At'las, v. t. To support (a burden) like Atlas.

atlas folio = ATLAS, 7.

at-loi'de-an, a. Anat. Atlantal.

at-loi'do- (ăt-loi'dō-). [atlo- + -oid.] A combining form used in anatomy to indicate connection with, or relation to, the atlas; as, at-loi'do-ax'oid, pert. to the atlas and axis.

at'man (ăt'mən), n. [Skr. ātman.] Hinduism. a The life principle, soul, or individual essence. b [cap.] The universal ego from whom all individual atmans arise. It is a European excrescence on the East Indian thought.

at-mi'a-try (ăt-mī'ə-trĭ), n. [Gr. ἀτμός vapor + -iatry.] Treatment of disease by vapors or gases, as by inhalation.

at'mid- (ăt'mĭd-). [Gr. ἄτμις, ἀτμιδος, smoke, vapor.] Physiol. Chem. A combining form denoting formation by the hydrolyzing action of superheated water; as in at'mid-al-bu'min and at'mid-al'bu-mose, substances formed by heating a proteid, as fibrin, to temperatures over 100° C. in water contained in sealed tubes. Also used adjectively; as, atmid bodies.

at'mi-dom'e-ter (ăt'mĭ-dŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [atmid- + -meter.] An atmometer.

at-mol'y-sis (-ĭ-sĭs), n. [atmo- + -lysis.] Act or process of separating mingled gases of unequal diffusibility by transmission through porous substances.

at'mo-lyze (ăt'mō-līz), v. t. To subject to atmolysis. — at'mo-ly-za'tion (-lĭ-zā'shŭn ; -lī-zā'-), n.

at'mo-lyz'er (-līz'ẽr), n. An apparatus for atmolyzing.

at-mom'e-ter (ăt-mŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [atmo- + -meter.] An instrument for measuring the rate of evaporation from a moist surface.

at'mos-phere (ăt'mŏs-fẽr), n. [Gr. ἀτμός vapor (akin to Skr. ātman breath, soul, G. atem breath) + σφαῖρα sphere. See SPHERE.] 1. a The whole mass of air surrounding the earth, — applied also to the gaseous envelope of any celestial orb, or other body; as, the atmosphere of Mars. See AIR. b Any gaseous envelope or medium.

An atmosphere of cold oxygen. Miller.

2. A supposed medium around various bodies; as, electrical atmosphere, a medium formerly supposed to surround electrical bodies.

3. Any surrounding or pervading influence or condition.

The chillest of social atmospheres. Hawthorne

4. The portion of air in any locality, or affected by a special physical or sanitary condition; as, the atmosphere of the room; a moist or noxious atmosphere.

5. Physics. The pressure of the air at the sea level, used as a unit. The standard pressure is that under which the mercury barometer stands at 760 millimeters. It is equivalent to about 14.7 lbs. to the sq. inch.

6. Paint. & Drawing. = AIR, 14.

at'mos-phere, v. t. To envelop as an atmosphere; to place or condition as to atmosphere.

at'mos-pher'ic (-fẽr'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to the atmosphere; specif.: a Of the nature of, or forming, the atmosphere; as, atmospheric air. b Existing, occurring, acting, etc., in the atmosphere.

The lower atmospheric current. Darwin.

c Caused, or operated on, by the atmosphere; pneumatic; as, an atmospheric effect; an atmospheric engine; the atmospheric envelope of the earth.

atmospheric electricity, electricity of the atmosphere or clouds. See LIGHTNING. — a. engine. See STEAM ENGINE. — a. hammer, a pneumatic hammer. — a. line. a Steam Engin. A line showing atmospheric pressure drawn on the indicator card by the pencil before steam is admitted to the indicator (see INDICATOR, n., 3). b pl. Astron. Variable lines seen in the solar spectrum, due to aqueous vapor in the earth's atmosphere. — a. pressure, the pressure exerted by the atmosphere, not merely downwards, but in every direction. See ATMOSPHERE, 5. — a. tides, tidal movements of the atmosphere resembling those of the ocean, but produced mainly by diurnal temperature changes.

at'mos-pher'i-cal (-fẽr'ĭ-kăl), a. 1. Of or pertaining to the atmosphere; atmospheric.

2. Dependent on, or affected by, the atmosphere. Rare.

that atolls are built upon the rims of submerged craters has been abandoned as a general explanation. Darwin's theory, which has long been generally accepted, assumes a protracted subsidence of the sea bottom where the reefs are, at a rate not greater than that of the upward building of the coral. It regards the atoll as having commenced as a fringing reef, as having later become a barrier reef, and finally, after the submergence of the island about which it started, an atoll. Recent investigations afford confirmatory evidence of Darwin's theory as applied to some regions, but it is not regarded as of universal application, for Murray and others have shown that barrier reefs and atolls are sometimes formed without subsidence.

at'om (ăt'ŭm), n. [L. atomus, Gr. ἄτομος, uncut, indivisible, as n., atom; ἀ- not + τομος, verbal adj. of τεμνειν to cut. cf. F. atome. See TOME.] 1. One of the minute indivisible particles of which, according to atomism, the universe is composed. See ATOMISM, 1.

2. Chem. & Physics. a According to the atomic theory, the smallest particle of an element which can exist either alone or in combination with similar particles of the same or of a different element; the smallest particle of an element which enters into the composition of molecules. See ATOMIC THEORY. b A group of such particles, constituting the smallest quantity of a radical; as, an atom of ammonium. Obs. or R. c Sometimes, esp. in earlier literature, a molecule. d A quantity proportional to the atomic weight; specif., the atomic weight in grams.

3. Anything extremely small; particle; whit; jot.

There was not an atom of water. Sir J. Ross.

at'o-me-chan'ics (ăt'ō-mē-kăn'ĭks), n. [atom + mechanics.] Physics. That part of molecular physics which treats of the motions of atoms and of the forces supposed to be exerted by them and upon them.

a-tom'ic (ā-tŏm'ĭk) } a. 1. Of, about, or pertaining to, at-a-tom'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } oms.

2. Adhering to atomism.

3. Extremely minute; tiny.

atomic heat, Chem., the product obtained by multiplying the atomic weight of any element by its specific heat. The atomic heat of elements in the solid state is nearly a constant, the mean value being 6.4 (law of Dulong and Petit). — a. refraction or refractive power. See MOLECULAR REFRACTION. — a. theory or hypothesis, Chem., the theory that all material substances are composed of minute particles or atoms of a comparatively small number of kinds, all the atoms of the same kind being uniform in size, weight, and other properties. It is the atomism of philosophy formulated into a scientific theory, first distinctly announced by the English chemist Dalton in 1803–1807. Dalton also stated the laws of definite and multiple proportions, and showed the possibility of determining the relative weights of the atoms. The theory was further developed by Avogadro, who distinguished between molecules and atoms and furnished in his hypothesis a guiding principle for the determination of molecular and atomic weights. Since then many discoveries, as the law of Dulong and Petit, the phenomena of isomorphism, of substitution, and of isomerism, and more recently ionization and radioactivity, have contributed to the advancement of the theory. According to recent discoveries the atom is to be conceived of, not as an ultimate particle, but as a complex system whose components (subatoms) are in rapid orbital motion. According to the hypothesis of J. J. Thomson the atom of each element represents a stable arrangement of a number of electrons, and radioactive change is a process due to some disturbing force, resulting in the expulsion of electrons or groups of electrons and the formation of a new stable arrangement, that is, the atom of another element of lower atomic weight. See AVOGADRO'S HYPOTHESIS, MOLECULE, ELECTRON, PERIODIC SYSTEM, ETHER. — a. volume, Chem., the quotient obtained by dividing the atomic weight of an element by its specific gravity. — a. weight, Chem., the relative weight of the atom of an element, referred to some element taken as a standard. In many tables the atomic weight of hydrogen is taken as unity, but the majority of chemists now favor the atomic weight of 16 for oxygen as a basis (which basis is the one adopted in this Dictionary). This gives to hydrogen the value 1.0076. For the table of atomic weights, see ELEMENT.

at'o-mic'i-ty (ăt'ō-mĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Chem. a Equivalence; valence. See VALENCE. b The number of atoms in the molecule of an element. c The number of replaceable atoms or groups in the molecule of a compound.

at'om-ism (ăt'ŭm-ĭz'm), n. 1. Philos. The doctrine that the physical universe (or, as sometimes taught, the whole universe, both physical and mental) is composed of simple, indivisible, and minute particles or atoms. Atomism dates from pre-Socratic times. Its first clear enunciation came with Leucippus and Democritus (born about 460 B. C.), who taught that all phenomena are to be explained by the incessant movement of atoms differing only in shape, order, and position. In modern times, besides the development of chemical and physical theory (see ATOMIC THEORY), many thinkers have endeavored to interpret atomism from a psychical point of view, either treating the atoms as mind stuff (see MIND STUFF) or as composed of sense elements.

2. The independent action of individual atoms, or the doctrine of such action.

The instinctive tendency of Englishmen towards what is sometimes, not perhaps judiciously, called "atomism." London Spectator

at'om-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk) } a. Of or pertaining to atoms · reat'om-is'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } lating to atomism. — at'om-is'ti-cal-ly, adv.

at'om-ize (ăt'ŭm-īz), v. t. ; AT'OM-IZED (-īzd) ; AT'OM-IZ'ING (-iz'ĭng). To reduce to atoms, or to fine spray. — at'om-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn ; -ĭ-zā'-), n.

The liquids in the form of spray are said to be pulverized, nebulized, or atomized. Dunglison.

at'om-iz'er (ăt'ŭm-īz'ẽr), n. One that atomizes; esp., an instrument for atomizing a liquid, as for disinfecting.

at'o-my (ăt'ō-mĭ), n. ; pl. ATOMIES (-mĭz). An atom; a mite; a pygmy.

at'o-my, n. [For anatomy, taken as an atomy.] A skeleton. Obs., or Jocular. Shak.

at one. [ME. at on, atone, atoon, attone.] 1. In concord or friendship; in agreement (with each other); as, to be, bring, make, or set, at one, that is, to be or bring in or to a state of agreement or reconciliation.

If gentil men, or others of hir contree
Were wrothe, she wolde bringen hem atoon. Chaucer

2. Of the same opinion; agreed; concurring; as, on these points only are we at one.

3. Together. Obs. Spenser.

a-tone' (a-tōn'), v. i. ; A-TONED' (-tōnd') ; A-TON'ING (-tōn'ĭng). [From at one, i. e., to be, or cause to be, at one. See AT ONE.] 1. To agree; to accord. Obs.

He and Aufidius can no more atone
Than violentest contrariety. Shak.

2. To make reparation, compensation, expiation, or amends, for an offense or a crime.

The murderer fell, and blood atoned for blood Pope

a-tone', v. t. 1. To set at one; to reduce to concord; to reconcile, as enemies; to appease; to harmonize. Obs.

I would do much
To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio Shak.

2. To join in one; to form by uniting. Obs.

High built with pines that heaven and earth atone. Chapman.

3. To make satisfaction for, to expiate.

2. Amends; expiation; atonement.

Liveth in dread lest there be no atone

a-tone'ment (ā-tōn'mĕnt), n. 1. (Lit., a setting at one.) Reconciliation, as between God and sinful man; restoration of friendly relations; agreement; concord. (See def. 2.) Archaic.

By whom we have now received the atonement Rom. v. 11.
He desires to make atonement
Betwixt the Duke of Gloucester and your brothers Shak.

2. Satisfaction or reparation made by giving an equivalent for an injury, or by doing or suffering that which will be received in satisfaction for an offense or injury; expiation; amends; — with for. Specif.: Theol. The saving or redeeming work of Christ wrought by his obedience, personal sufferings, and death. Prior to Anselm (d. 1109), Christ was thought to have paid a ransom to the Devil by his sufferings and thus wrought the deliverance of those who believed on him. But since that day the leading theories are: a The Anselmian, or the vicarious, or substitutional, atonement. This is the generally accepted orthodox view, and is held by Roman Catholic and by Calvinistic theologians. According to this, the righteousness of Christ was accepted by the Divine Father as a substitute for the righteousness of mankind lost through the fall, and the suffering and death of Christ were accepted as an equivalent of the punishment justly incurred by mankind: men being consequently released from punishment, on condition of their acceptance through faith of Christ's sacrifice. b Governmental atonement, a theory (originated by Grotius (d. 1648) the Dutch statesman, but common among New England theologians) that violated law must be followed by punishment, for the deterrent effect on the community, as in the penalties inflicted by human society and that Christ's death as a spectacle to the universe serves this purpose of warning, and obviates the necessity of the punishment of man. c Moral atonement, set forth esp. by Maurice (d. 1872) and Robertson (d. 1853) in England, and Bushnell (d. 1876) in America. Christ, it is held, reveals by his holy life and love-inspired suffering the nature of God, and so wins man to repentance and the pursuit of holiness, which is the only satisfaction God requires.

Syn. — See PROPITIATION.

a-ton'ic (ā-tŏn'ĭk), a. [Cf. F. atonique. See ATONY.] 1. Med. Characterized by atony; as, an atonic disease.

2. Gram. Unaccented; as, an atonic syllable.

3. Phon. Without tone or vocality; voiceless; surd.

a-ton'ic, n. 1. Gram. A word or syllable with no accent.

2. Phon. An element of speech produced by the breath alone without voice; a voiceless, or surd, consonant; a breathing.

3. Med. A remedy for organic excitement or irritation.

at'o-ny (ăt'ō-nĭ), n. [Gr. ἀτονια slackness; ἀ- not + τόνος tone: cf. F. atonie.] 1. Med. Want of tone, or vital energy, weakness of the system, or of any, esp. a contractile, organ.

2. Phon. Weakness from lack of stress, or accent; as, the atony of an unaccented syllable.

A-tos'sa (ā-tŏs'ā), n. [NL., fr. Gr. Ἄτοσσα.] 1. The daughter of Cyrus, successively queen of Cambyses, Smerdis, and Darius Hystaspis, by the last of whom she had Xerxes. Herodotus speaks of her as a follower of Sappho.

2. Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough; — a name given her by Pope in his "Moral Essays," Ep. II. She was a friend of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, whom Pope called Sappho.

a-tox'yl (ā-tŏk'sĭl), n. [a- not + toxic + -yl.] Pharm. A derivative of aniline containing 37 per cent of arsenic, used hypodermically in chronic skin diseases.

at'ra-bile (ăt'rə-bĭl), n. [L. atra bilis; a translation of Gr. μελαγχολια melancholy: cf. F. atrabile.] Black bile; melancholy. See MELANCHOLY. Obs.

at'ra-bil'i-a-ry (-bĭl'ĭ-ə-rĭ), a. 1. Of or pert. to atrabile.

2. Melancholic or hypochondriac; atrabilious.

atrabiliary capsules, Anat., the suprarenal capsules; — so called from the dark color of their medullary substance.

5. To connect; to place so as to belong; to assign by authority; to appoint; as, an officer is attached to a certain regiment, company, or ship.

6. To win the heart of; to connect by ties of love or self-interest; to attract; to fasten or bind by moral influence; — with to; as, attached to a friend; attaching others to us by wealth or flattery.

Incapable of attaching a sensible man Miss Austen.

God . . . by various ties attaches man to man Cowper

7. To connect, in a figurative sense; to ascribe or attribute; to affix; — with to; as, to attach great importance to a particular circumstance.

To this treasure a curse is attached Bayard Taylor

Syn. — Connect, unite, join, add. — ATTACH, AFFIX, ANNEX, SUBJOIN, APPEND agree in the idea of joining one object to another (see JOIN, MINGLE). ATTACH (opposed to detach) is the most general term, and implies the fastening by any means of one thing to another, as, to attach a hook to a line, a tag to a parcel, a condition to a promise. AFFIX (see AFFIX, n.) differs from attach, when at all, in suggesting a slight degree of subordination of the second object to the first — an implication carried still further in ANNEX, as, to affix a stamp to an envelope, one's signature to a document; to annex conquered territory to a kingdom, a codicil to a will. APPEND (see APPENDIX, APPENDAGE) implies that the object added is supplemental or accessory to the principal thing; as, to append notes to a chapter, a seal to a record; SUBJOIN, that one object is added below or at the end of another; as, to subjoin a postscript to a letter, an illustration to an argument. Cf. ADHERE.

There is a very hard condition attached to his compliance T. L. Peacock.

A crew of mischievous critics at Edinburgh [have] affixed the epithet of the "Cockney School" to one or two writers born in the metropolis Hazlitt.

at-tach', v. i. 1. To adhere; to be attached.

The great interest which attaches to the mere knowledge of these facts cannot be doubted. Brougham.

2. To come into legal operation in connection with anything; to vest; as, dower will attach. Cooley.

‖ at'ta'ché' (ä'tä'shā'), n. [F., p. p. of attacher. See ATTACH, v. t.] One attached to another person or thing, as a member of a suite or staff. Specif.: A person attached to an embassy.

at-tached' (ă-tăcht'), p. p. & p. a. from ATTACH, v. Hence, specif.: a Zoöl. Permanently fixed when adult, as a barnacle, or oyster. b Arch. = ENGAGED at-tach'ment (ă-tăch'mĕnt), n. [F. attachement.] 1. Act of attaching, or state of being attached; close adherence or affection, fidelity, regard; any passion or affection that binds a person; as, an attachment to a friend, or to a party.

The human mind has exhausted its forces in the endeavor to rend the supernatural from its attachment to this history. I. Taylor.

2. That by which one thing is attached to another; connection; as, to cut the attachments of a muscle.

3. Something attached; some adjunct attached to an instrument, machine, or other object; as, a sewing machine attachment (that is, a device attached to a sewing machine to enable it to do special work, as tucking, etc.).

4. Law. A seizure or taking into custody by virtue of a legal process; also, the writ or precept commanding such seizure or taking. Attachment is applied to a seizure or taking either of persons or property. In the serving of process in a civil suit, it is generally applied to the taking of property, whether at common law, as a species of distress, to compel defendant's appearance, or under local statutes, to satisfy the judgment the plaintiff may recover in the action. The terms attachment and arrest are both applied to the taking or apprehension of a defendant to compel an appearance in a civil action. Attachments are issued at common law and in chancery against persons for contempt of court. In England attachment is employed in some cases where capias (which see) is in the United States, as against a witness who fails to appear on summons. In some of the New England States a writ of attachment is a species of mesne process upon which the property of a defendant may be seized at the commencement of a suit and before summons to him, and may be held to satisfy the judgment the plaintiff may recover. In other States this writ can issue only against absconding debtors and those who conceal themselves. See GARNISHMENT.

Syn. — ATTACHMENT, AFFECTION, LOVE. — ATTACHMENT and AFFECTION differ in that affection is confined to sentient beings, whereas attachment may apply even to inanimate objects; as, an attachment to one's profession, to a house in which one has lived. Attachment connotes strong liking or even devotion; affection, rather warmth and tenderness of sentiment. AFFECTION and LOVE differ in that affection (see FEELING) implies a feeling more settled and regulated, less intense or ardent, than love (see LIKE), which alone of the three may connote passion. Thus to one's friends any one of the three terms may be applicable; to the members of one's own family, love or affection, but scarcely attachment; to God, love (in the sense of reverent devotion), but not affection or attachment. See FOND, ESTEEM, CONSTANCY, LOYALTY.

at-tack' (ă-tăk'), v. t.; AT-TACKED' (-tăkt'); AT-TACK'ING. [F. attaquer, It. attaccare to fasten, attack, of the same origin as F. attacher. See ATTACH.] 1. To fall upon with force; to assail, as with force and arms; to make an attack upon; to assault. "Attack their lines." Dryden.

2 To assail with unfriendly speech or writing; to begin a controversy with; to attempt to overthrow or bring into disrepute by criticism or satire; to censure; as, to attack a man, or his opinions, in a pamphlet.

3. To set to work upon, as upon a task or problem, or some object of labor or investigation.

4 To begin to affect; to begin to act upon, injuriously or destructively; to begin to decompose or waste.

On the fourth of March he was attacked by fever. Macaulay.

Hydrofluoric acid . . . attacks the glass B. Stewart.

Syn. — ATTACK, ASSAIL, ASSAULT all denote a violent onset, attack being the generic term, the others specific. To ATTACK is to commence the onset; to ASSAIL, to make a sudden and violent attack, or to attack repeatedly; to ASSAULT, to attack physically by a hand-to-hand approach or by unlawful violence; as, to attack by offering violence of any kind, or with argument or satire; to assail by means of missile weapons, or with abuse or reproaches; to assault with the fist or with a club. In the figurative sense, assault is less common than assail; as, to be assailed (less frequently, assaulted) by severe temptations. See TRESPASS.

at-tack', v. i. To make an onset or attack.

at-tack', n. [Cf. F. attaque.] 1. Act of falling on with force or violence; onset; assault; — opposed to defense.

2. Offensive or antagonistic movement or action of any kind; specif.: a An assault upon one's feelings or reputation with unfriendly or bitter words. b An access of disease; a fit of sickness. c The beginning of corrosive, decomposing, or destructive action, by a chemical agent. d Cricket. The act of bowling. e Fencing. An effort to hit; — used also as a word of command.

3. A setting to work upon some task, etc.; beginning of action; specif., Phon., act or method of beginning a sound; the "on glide" by which a sound is sometimes begun.

at-tain'a-ble (ă-b'l), a. [Cf. OF. ataignable.] That may be attained. — at-tain'a-bil'i-ty (-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. — at-tain'a-ble-ness, n.

at-tain'der (ă-tān'dẽr), n. [OF. ataindre to accuse, convict (inf. as n.). Often erroneously referred to F. teindre to stain. See ATTAINT, ATTAIN.] 1. Act of attainting, or state of being attainted; extinction of the civil rights and capacities of a person, consequent upon sentence of death or outlawry; as, an act of attainder. Formerly attainder was the inseparable consequence of a judicial or legislative sentence for treason or felony, and involved the forfeiture or escheat of all the real and personal property of the condemned person, and such "corruption of blood" that he could neither receive nor transmit by inheritance, nor could he sue or testify in any court, or claim any legal protection or rights. In England attainder upon judgment of treason or felony was completely abolished in 1870 (by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23); and in the United States the Constitution provides (Const. Art. I., sect. 9, cl. 13) that no bill of attainder shall be passed, and (Art. III., sec. 3) that no attainder of treason (in consequence of a judicial sentence) shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted. A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts the consequences of attainder upon a person without a judicial trial. Cf. OUTLAWRY, FORFEITURE, ESCHEAT.

2. A stain or staining, dishonor or condemnation. Obs.

He lived from all attainder of suspect. Shak

They say the tongues of dying men Enforce attention like deep harmony. Shak.

By psychologists attention has been variously analyzed, the most important distinction being that of voluntary from involuntary attention. See citations following.

Attention . . is an act of voluntary thinking, from which is inseparable a cognition of the object as distinct from the thinking. J Martineau.

Attention . . is the taking possession by the mind, in clear and vivid form, of one out of what seem several simultaneously possible objects or trains of thought. Wm. James.

The word attention, if we consider its derivation, would seem to be a synonym of conation. It ought to mean "tendency towards an object" G. F. Stout.

2. Faculty of giving attention (in sense 1). See FACULTY.

3. Mil. The attitude of readiness for action on receiving orders, which is assumed in response to the command of "attention;" as, to come to attention; to stand at attention.

4. An act of civility or courtesy; care for the wishes, comfort, or pleasure of others; as, attentions paid to a stranger.

Syn. — Care, heed, study, application, advertence; respect, regard, consideration.

at-tire'ment (-mĕnt), n. [Cf. OF. atirement.] Attire; adornment.

At'tis (ăt'ĭs), n. [L. Attis, Gr. 'Αττις.] Myth. A Phrygian god of vegetation and young life, the counterpart of the Semitic Adonis. He was beloved of the goddess Cybele. According to one story he was slain by a boar, as was Adonis; according to another he died from loss of blood following self-mutilation. From his blood sprang violets. His death and resurrection were annually celebrated at a spring festival. See CYBELE; cf. ADONIS.

at'ti-tude (ăt'ĭ-tūd), n. [F. attitude, It. attitudine, LL. aptitudo, fr. L. aptus suited, fitted. Cf. APTITUDE.] 1. Paint. & Sculp. The posture, action, or disposition of a figure
2. The posture or position of a person, an animal, or sometimes an inanimate object, or the manner in which the parts of the body are disposed; position assumed or studied to serve a purpose; as, a threatening attitude; an attitude of entreaty.
3. Position or bearing as indicating action, feeling, or mood; as, in times of trouble let a nation preserve a firm attitude; one's mental attitude in respect to religion.

The attitude of the country was rapidly changing J. R. Green.

Syn. — See POSITION.

at'ti-tu'di-nal (ăt'ĭ-tū'dĭ-năl), a. Relating to attitude.

at'ti-tu'di-na'ri-an (-nā'rĭ-ăn), n. One who attitudinizes; a posture maker. — at'ti-tu'di-na'ri-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

at'ti-tu'di-nize (-tū'dĭ-nīz), v. i.; -NIZED (-nīzd); -NIZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). To assume or practice attitudes; to strike an attitude; to pose for effect. — at'ti-tu'di-niz'er (-ĕr).

Maria, who is the most picturesque figure, was put to attitudinize at the harp. Hannah More

at'tle (ăt''l), n. Mining. Rubbish or refuse; discarded broken rock.

at-torn' (ă-tûrn'), v. i. [OF. atorner, aturner, atourner, to direct, prepare, dispose, attorn; a (L. ad) + torner to turn. See TURN, v. t.] a Feudal Law. To turn or transfer homage and service from one lord to another; to render homage and service (to a lord). This is the act of feudatories, vassals, or tenants, upon the alienation of the estate. b Modern Law. To agree to become tenant to one as owner or landlord of an estate previously held of another; to recognize one (expressly or by implication) as landlord or the person in whose behalf one holds something. See ATTORNMENT, 2.

at-torn', v. t. To turn or transfer, as from one estate or lord to another; to transfer (homage, service, rents, etc.).

at-tor'ney (ă-tûr'nĭ), n.; pl. -NEYS (-nĭz). [ME. aturneye, OF. atorné, p. p. of atorner: cf. LL. atturnatus, attornatus, fr. attornare. See ATTORN.] 1. Substitute; proxy; agent. Obs.

And will have no attorney but myself Shak.

2. Law. One who is legally appointed by another to transact any business for him; an attorney in fact; specif., a legal agent (an attorney at law) qualified to act for suitors and defendants in legal proceedings. An attorney is either public or private. A private attorney, or an attorney in fact, is a person appointed by another, by a letter or power of attorney, to transact any business for him out of court; but, in a more extended sense, this class includes any agent employed in any business, or to do any act in pais, for another (cf. AGENT, 2). A public attorney, or attorney at law, is a practitioner in a court of law, legally qualified to prosecute and defend actions in such court, on the retainer of clients. The attorney at law answers to the proctor in the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, and to the solicitor in chancery, and to the proctor and the counselor in the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, and all of these are comprehended under the more general term lawyer. In Great Britain, and in some States of the United States, attorneys are distinguished from counselors, or in England barristers, in that the business of the former is to carry on the practical and formal parts of the suit and of the latter to plead or argue causes in open court. In many States of the United States, however, no such distinction exists. In England, by the Judicature Act of 1873 the title attorney was abolished, and attorneys at law were denominated solicitors. Cf. ADVOCATE, 1.

at-tor'ney-gen'er-al (ă-tûr'nĭ-jĕn'ĕr-ăl), n.; pl. ATTORNEY-GENERALS or ATTORNEYS-GENERAL. Law. The chief law officer of the state, empowered to act in all litigation in which the law-executing power is a party, and to advise the supreme executive whenever required.

at-torn'ment (ă-tûrn'mĕnt), n. [OF. atornement. See ATTORN.] 1. A turning over or assigning; assignment. Rare.
2. Law. Act of a feudatory, vassal, or tenant, by which he consents, upon the alienation of an estate, to receive a new lord or superior, and transfers to him his homage and service; the agreement or acknowledgment by a tenant that he holds his tenement of a new person as landlord; hence, in bailments, the acknowledgment by a bailee that he holds the property on behalf of a new party. An attornment acts as an estoppel to prevent the one attorning from denying the title of the one to whom he attorns.

at-tract' (ă-trăkt'), v. t.; AT-TRACT'ED, AT-TRACT'ING. [L. attractus, p. p. of attrahere; ad + trahere to draw. See TRACE, v. t.] 1. To draw or draw in, as by suction; specif., to inhale. Obs.
2. To draw to, or cause to tend to, esp., to cause to approach, adhere, or combine; or to cause to resist divulsion, separation, or decomposition; to act upon by attraction.

All bodies and all parts of bodies mutually attract themselves and one another. Derham.

3. To draw by influence of a moral or emotional kind; to engage or fix, as the mind, attention, etc.; to invite or allure, as, to attract admirers.

Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze. Milton.

Syn. — Draw, allure, invite, entice, influence.

attracted-disk electrometer, an electrometer in which the attraction is determined between a metal plate and a disk suspended just above and parallel to it. Cf. BALANCE ELECTROMETER.

at-trac'tion (ă-trăk'shŭn), n. [L. attractio: cf. F. attraction.] 1. Act, process, property, or power of attracting.
2. Physics. A force acting mutually between particles of matter tending to draw them together and resisting their separation. See FORCE. Of the various forms of attraction, gravitation acts universally and varies with the inverse square of the intervening distance; magnetic and electrical attraction are of limited sensible range and polar in action; chemical affinity, and cohesion and adhesion (of which capillarity is a form), act only at insensible distances.
3. That which attracts; an attractive object or feature.
Syn. — Allurement, enticement, charm.

attraction sphere. 1 Zool. a The central mass of the aster in mitotic cell division; centrosphere. b Less often, the mass of archoplasm left by the aster in the resting cell.
2. Bot. A small body situated on or near the nucleus in the cells of some of the lower plants, consisting of two centrospheres containing centrosomes. It exercises an important function in mitosis.

at-trac'tive (-tĭv), a. [Cf. F. attractif.] Having the power or quality of attracting; as, the attractive force of bodies. Sir I. Newton. "Attractive graces." Milton.
— at-trac'tive-ly, adv. — at-trac'tive-ness, n.

The motion of the steel to its attrahent. Glanvill

2. Med. A substance which, by irritating the surface, excites action in the part to which it is applied, as any blistering agent; a sinapism.

at-trib'ute (ă-trĭb'ūt; see note below), v. t.; AT-TRIB'UT-ED (-ū-tĕd); AT-TRIB'UT-ING (-ū-tĭng). [L. attributus, p. p. of attribuere; ad + tribuere to bestow. See TRIBUTE.] To ascribe; to consider, give, or bestow (something) as due or appropriate to; to refer, as an effect to a cause; to impute; to assign, to consider as belonging to.

We attribute nothing to God that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it Abp. Tillotson.
The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. Shak.

Syn. — See REFER.

☞ Formerly accented at'tri-bute and at-tri-bute', later yielding to the tendency to distinguish verbs from substantives of the same spelling by a different accent. See Guide to Pron., § 81.

at'tri-bute (ăt'rĭ-būt), n. [L. attributum · cf. F. attribut.] 1. That which is attributed; a quality considered as belonging to, or inherent in, a person or thing; an essential or necessary property or characteristic.

But mercy is above this sceptered sway; . . .
It is an attribute to God himself Shak.

2. Reputation. Poetic. Shak.
3. Paint & Sculp. A conventional symbol of office, character, or identity, added to any particular figure; as, a club is the attribute of Hercules.
4. Gram. A word denoting an attribute or quality, an attributive adjunct, as an adjective or adjective phrase, etc.
5. Logic. Any quality or characteristic (as of quantity or relation) which may be predicated of some subject; specif., such a quality or characteristic as belongs to the subject essentially or necessarily; — opposed to accident.

Augs'burg, or Au-gus'tan Con-fes'sion (ouks'bŏōrk; ô-gŭs'tăn). A statement of faith drawn up by Melanchthon at Augsburg (Lat. Augusta Vindelicorum), and embodying Luther's views. It was presented at the Diet of Augsburg, June 25, 1530, as the creed of the Lutheran Church, and was adopted and signed by 7 German princes, including 3 electors, and by representatives of 6 cities.

au'gur (ô'gŭr), n. [L. Of uncertain origin: the first part of the word is perh. fr. L. avis bird.] 1. Rom. Relig. A member of the highest class of official diviners of ancient Rome. Among the sacerdotal orders, the college of augurs, which comprised successively 3, 6, 9, and, after Cæsar's time, 16 members, ranked next after the pontifical college. Its sole duty was the interpretation of signs and portents. Observations were made from a rectangular space, or templum, which was not necessarily marked out except verbally (by the augur). Auguries were of two main classes: Solicited auguries (auguria impetrativa) comprised predetermined signs answering definite questions, as when the flight of birds from this or that quarter of the heavens declared the conditions for an undertaking favorable or unfavorable. Unsolicited, or voluntary, auguries (auguria oblativa) comprised unexpected portents or omens, occurring during the observation. These latter were interpreted according to the accumulated lore of the augurs. Since the observation of the flight of birds, auspice, was the chief mode of augury, the two terms (as also augur and auspex) are largely interchangeable. (Cf., however, HARUSPEX.) The insignia of the augur comprised his trabea, or robe, and lituus, or staff.
2. One who foretells events by omens; a soothsayer; a diviner; a prophet.
Augur of ill, whose tongue was never found Without a priestly curse or boding sound. Dryden

Au'gus-tin'i-an-ism (-ĭz'm), Au-gus'tin-ism (ô-gŭs'tĭn-ĭz'm), n. The philosophical and theological doctrines of St. Augustine (Aurelius Augustinus; 354–430 A. D.), called the Christian Plato. He held that God is the highest reality, embodying the supreme beauty of which creation is a transient likeness. In the general beauty of creation the individual and evil are lost to view; but in the unredeemed human life sin and misery, brought on by the original sin of Adam, are intensely real. Only through divine grace, mediated through the Church (whose supremacy Augustine upheld against the Donatists), is effected the deliverance of the elect, for whom is reserved eternal beatitude in the vision and love of God in the life to come. The fundamental necessity of grace vouchsafed, taught by Augustine, was combated by the Pelagians, who insisted upon the effectiveness of the individual's own effort for salvation. See PATRISTIC PHILOSOPHY, SOUL, of. DONATISM, PELAGIANISM. With reference to Augustine and his doctrines, Harnack says: "The history of piety and of dogmas in the West was so thoroughly dominated by Augustine from the beginning of the 5th century to the era of the Reformation . . . that the whole time forms one period . . As a church teacher he united three great circles of thought . . (1) a complete circle of [eight] conceptions: God, the soul, alienation from God, irresistible grace, hunger for God, unrest in the world, rest in God, beatitude; (2) a second circle includes six ideas: sin, grace through Christ, grace in general, faith, love, and hope; (3) the third group relates to the Catholic church [in four particulars]: as authority, dispenser of grace, administrator of the sacraments, and as means and aim of all God's ordinances. . . He refashioned dogmatics proper . . and gave the first impulse to a study that has become of immense importance for theology. Centuries had to elapse before Augustine found disciples worthy of him"

Aus-tra'li-an (ôs-trā'lĭ-ăn; -trāl'yăn), n. 1. An aborigine of Australia, or native "blackfellow." The Australians are of medium or tall stature, poor muscular development, and a chocolate-brown or black color. They are dolichocephalic and of low cranial capacity, with Negroid features, but with coarse, wavy, and abundant hair and beard. They are of low intelligence, but docile and light-hearted in disposition, and of unusual keenness of sense. In culture they are among the lowest races of mankind; and they are ignorant even of the use of the bow and arrow, though possessing a unique weapon in the boomerang. Ethnologists have variously allied them to the Melanesian, Dravidian, and Negro races. Their languages are generally considered to form an isolated family.

2. A native or citizen of the Australian commonwealth.

au-then'tic (ô-thĕn'tĭk), a. [ME. autentik, OF. autentique, F. authentique, L. authenticus coming from the real author, of original or firsthand authority, from Gr. αὐθεντικός, fr. αὐθέντης one who does anything with his own hand, αὐτός self + a form ἕντης (in comp.), of uncertain origin. Cf. EFFENDI.] 1. Authoritative. Obs. Milton.

Esteem their sentences as authentic as laws. Norris.

2. Having a genuine original or authority, in opposition to that which is false, fictitious, counterfeit, or apocryphal; being what it purports to be; genuine; not of doubtful origin; real; as, an authentic paper or register.

3. Of approved authority; true; trustworthy; credible; as, an authentic portrait; authentic information. Chaucer.

4. Law. Vested with due formalities, and legally attested.

5. Music. Having an immediate relation to the tonic, in distinction from plagal, which has a correspondent relation to the fifth or dominant in the octave below the tonic; as, authentic modes, authentic melodies, those employing the compass of the octave above their tonic or final. See MODE.

Syn.—Authoritative, reliable, trustworthy, real, true, pure.—AUTHENTIC, GENUINE. The prevailing sense of AUTHENTIC is authoritative, trustworthy, with the implication of accordance with fact; as, "confirmed both by legend and authentic record" (Froude); "assurances more or less authentic" (Wordsworth); an authentic portrait. The prevailing sense of GENUINE is native, real, true (see REAL), often with the implication of descent from, or correspondence to, an original source or stock; as, a genuine merino, genuine piety; "true simplicity and genuine pathos" (Wordsworth); cf. (colloq.) "the genuine article" with "the real thing." Both terms are used—genuine more frequently than authentic—as opposed to spurious, counterfeit, apocryphal; as, "Let them contrast their own fantastical personages . . . with the authentic rustics of Burns" (Jeffrey); "What is genuine knowledge, and what is its counterfeit" (J. H. Newman). The 18th-century distinction between the two terms, as applied to documents—"A genuine book is that which was written by the person whose name it bears as the author of it; an authentic book is that which relates matters of fact as they really happened" (Bp. Watson)—while still often observed, is becoming obliterated in present usage; as, "The criticism which thus so freely diminishes the number of his [Giorgione's] authentic works" (W. Pater); "Some collectors frankly take the ground that they buy what pleases them, and that age and authenticity are minor considerations" (The Nation). See REAL, CORRECT.

So great and admirable an automaton as the world Boyle.
These living automata, human bodies. Boyle

2. A machine that is self-moving, or has its motive power within itself;—applied esp. to such as appear to imitate spontaneously the motions of men, birds, or other animals. 3. A living being acting in a mechanical or involuntary manner; esp., a person who follows a routine without active intelligence.

au'to-mixte' sys'tem (ô'tō-mĭkst'; F. ō'tō'mēkst'). Mach. A system (devised by Henri Pieper, a Belgian) of driving automobiles employing a gasoline engine and an auxiliary reversible dynamo. When there is an excess of power the dynamo is driven by the engine so as to charge a small storage battery; when there is a deficiency of power the dynamo reverses and acts as an auxiliary motor. Sometimes called Pieper system. —automixte car, etc.

au'to-mo'bile (ô'tō-mō'bĭl), a. [auto- + mobile: cf. F. automobile.] Containing means of propulsion within itself; self-propelling; as, an automobile torpedo or car.

au'to-mo'bile (-mō'bĭl; -mō-bēl'), n. An automobile vehicle or mechanism; esp., a self-propelled vehicle suitable for use on a street or roadway. Automobiles are usually propelled by internal combustion engines (using volatile inflammable liquids, as gasoline or petrol, alcohol, naphtha, etc.), steam engines, or electric motors. The power of the driving motor varies from about 4 to 40 H. P. for ordinary vehicles ranging from the runabout to the touring car, up to as high as 200 H. P. for specially built racing cars. Automobiles are also commonly, and generally in British usage, called motor cars.

2. Cryst. = HOMOMORPHIC.

automorphic function, Math., one that possesses the property of linear periodicity either in general or in special form; one that satisfies identically the equation $F(S_{rs}Z) = F(Z)$, that is, a function unchanged by the substitutions of any group of linear transformations $Z = \frac{az+b}{cz+d}, ad-bc = 0$; —a generalization of the notion of periodic function.

au'tumn (ô'tŭm), n. [ME. autumpne, OF. autompne, F. automne, L. autumnus, of uncertain origin.] 1. The third season of the year, or the season between summer and winter, often called "the fall." Astronomically, autumn begins in the northern temperate zone at the autumnal equinox, about September 22, and ends at the winter solstice, about December 21; but in popular language it comprises, in America, September, October, and November; in England, August, September, and October. Autumn in the Southern Hemisphere is at the same time as spring in the Northern Hemisphere.

Fall is better on the merits than autumn, in every way: it is short, Saxon (like the other three season names), picturesque; it reveals its derivation to every one who uses it, not to the scholar only, like autumn; and we [the English] once had as good a right to it as the Americans; but we have chosen to let the right lapse, and to use the word now is no better than larceny. The King's English.

2. The harvest or fruits of autumn. Milton.

3. Time of maturity or decline; latter portion; third stage.

Dr. Preston was now entering into the autumn of the duke's favor. Fuller.

See VENGEANCE.] 1. To take vengeance for; to exact satisfaction for by punishing the injuring party; to vindicate by inflicting pain or evil on a wrongdoer; — used with on, upon, and, archaic, of, against.

He will avenge the blood of his servants Deut. XXXII 43.
Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold. Milton

Thy judgment in avenging thine enemies Bp Hall.

Syn. — Vindicate, requite, retaliate. — AVENGE, REVENGE. In present usage, to AVENGE is to inflict punishment, either in behalf of one's self or of others, for the sake of vindication or just retribution, as, to avenge an insult, to avenge the injuries of the helpless and innocent; "He [Moses] . . . avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian" (Acts vii. 24). To REVENGE is to inflict pain or injury in resentful or malicious retaliation; as, "A man that studieth revenge keeps his own wounds green" (Bacon); "A kiss . . . sweet as my revenge" (Shak.). See REQUITAL, VINDICTIVE.

2. Law. To avouch or verify; to offer to verify; to prove or justify. See AVERMENT, 3. Cowell.
3. To affirm with confidence; to declare in a positive manner, as in confidence of asserting the truth.
It is sufficient that the very fact hath its foundation in truth, as I do seriously aver is the case. Fielding.
Syn. — Assert, asseverate, protest. See AFFIRM.

av'er-age (ăv'ẽr-ăj), n. [OF. average, or LL. averagium, perh. fr. OF. aveir, avoir, F. avoir, property, horses, cattle, etc.; prop. infin., to have, fr. L. habere to have. Cf. F. avérage small cattle, and avarie (perh. of different origin) damage to ship or cargo, port dues. See HABIT; cf. AVER, n., AVERCORN, AVERPENNY.] 1. Old Eng. Law. A service of some kind due from a feudal tenant to his lord. It is generally considered to have been a carrying service, as of produce to market; and has been traditionally explained since Sir J. Skene as "service done by the tenant with his beasts of burden." In the form arriage it was retained in the expression "arriage and carriage" in Scottish leases until such indefinite services were prohibited by 20 Geo. II, c. 50.
2. [Cf. F. avarie damage to ship or cargo, port dues, It. avaria.] Mar. Law & Com. A tariff or duty on goods, etc. Obs.
3. Any charge, payable by the owner or consignor, in addition to the regular charge for freight of goods shipped. Obs., except specif., sundry small charges (called petty average, or averages) regularly and necessarily defrayed by the master, such as port charges, common pilotage, etc., which formerly were borne partly by the ship and partly by the cargo, but now are usually included in the freight. A customary composition for such charges is designated in the phrase "primage and average accustomed," still common in bills of lading, but now usually inoperative.
4. A loss less than total to cargo or ship, or a charge arising from damage done by sea perils; also, the equitable and proportionate distribution of such loss or expense among all chargeable with it; the incidence of the loss or charge. In marine insurance an average loss (that is, one which is a charge upon cargo or ship and therefore less than total) is called a particular, or less usually common or ordinary, average when chargeable only upon particular goods or interests. A loss or charge which falls upon the ship and cargo generally is called a general, or less usually gross, average. A particular average usually arises from unavoidable accident; a general average arises from an intentional sacrifice or expense made for the safety of all the interests involved in the same adventure under pressure of a common risk. Policies, by a clause called average clause, generally exempt the insurer from particular average, and in respect of some things from all average, the policies and clauses being often respectively designated as F. P. A. and F. A. A. Cf. YORK-ANTWERP RULES
5. A mean proportion, medial sum or quantity, made out of unequal sums or quantities; an arithmetical mean. Thus, if A loses 5 dollars, B 9, and C 16, the sum is 30, and the average 10.
6. Any medial estimate or generalization derived from a comparison of diverse specific cases; a medium or usual size, quantity, quality, rate, etc. "The average of sensations." Paley. Since the same average may be either the mean rank of a group of which most members are either far above or far below it, or the usual rank in a group of which most members are either at or near it, the latter sense is often specifically indicated; as, "the high individual average of our citizenship."
Syn. — AVERAGE, MEAN. In common usage, AVERAGE (usually a.) suggests little more than ordinary, the "common run," often implying general conformity to prevailing standards; as, the average man, average ability, the average morality. MEAN (usually n.) implies a middle point or course between two extremes; as, the happy mean.
on an average, taking the mean of unequal numbers or quantities.

av'er-age (ăv'ẽr-ăj), a. 1. Pertaining to an average or mean; medial; containing a mean proportion; of a mean size, quality, ability, etc.; ordinary; usual; as, an average profit; an average amount of rain; the average Englishman.
2. According to the laws of average; as, the loss must be made good by average contribution.

av'er-age, v. t.; AV'ER-AGED (-ăjd); AV'ER-AG-ING (-ă-jĭng).
1. To find the mean of, when sums or quantities are unequal; to reduce to a mean
2. To divide among a number, according to a given proportion; as, to average a loss.
3. To do, accomplish, get, etc., on an average.

av'er-age, v. i. 1. To form, or exist in, a mean or medial sum or quantity; to amount to, or to be, on an average; as, the losses of the owners will average twenty-five dollars each; these spars average ten feet in length.
2. Stock Speculating. To buy or sell additional shares so as to obtain an average price more favorable or safe than before, as where 100 shares are bought at 60, and on a fall to 50 in prices 100 shares more are bought, making the average price 55. Cant.
to average out, Stock Speculating, to close out a transaction without loss or at a profit by averaging. Cant.

average book. Banking. The book in which the average credit balances of depositors are kept.

average clause. Insurance. a A clause, in a policy, restricting the amount to be paid to such a sum, not exceeding the value of the property destroyed, as bears the same proportion to the loss as the face of the policy does to the value of the property insured. b See AVERAGE, n., 4.

a-ver'ment (a-vûr'mĕnt), n. [Cf. OF averement, LL. averamentum. See AVER, v. t.] 1. Act of averring, or that which is averred; affirmation; positive assertion.
2. Verification; establishment by evidence. Bacon.
3. Law. A positive statement of facts; an allegation; an offer to justify or prove what is alleged. In any stage of common-law pleadings, when either party advances new matter, he avers it to be true, by using this form of words: "and this he is ready to verify." This was formerly called an averment. In modern pleading it is termed a verification.

A-ver'ni-an (-nĭ-ăn) } ing to Avernus

A-ver'nus (-nŭs), n. [L.] The infernal regions; — so called after a small deep lake near Pozzuoli, in Campania, Italy, having high banks, and famous for its unhealthy vapors, which ancient writers fancied were so malignant as to kill birds flying over it.

Av'er-rho'a (ăv'ẽr-rō'ă), n. [NL., after the Arabian philosopher Averroës.] Bot. A genus of East Indian oxalidaceous pinnate-leaved trees containing two species, A. bilimbi and A. carambola, both commonly cultivated for their acid fruit. See BILIMBI, CARAMBOLA.

Av'er-ro'ism (-ĭz'm), n. The doctrines of the Arabian philosopher Averroës (Ibn Roshd), 1126–98 A. D., one of the first of the medieval interpreters of Aristotle. He taught that God, as a Sovereign Intelligence, is the highest reality, from whom emanates the active intellect (Νοῦς ποιητικός) which is the source of all lower intellects (sense perception, imagination, memory, discursive reason, etc., collectively called νοῦς παθητικός), and that these are destined to return again to God or be absorbed at the death of the body. See PANTHEISM. W. T. Harris.

2. To root up; — a perverted sense due to the former erroneous derivation. Obs. or R.

3. Opposed; adverse. Obs.
4. Bot. Turned away from the stem or axis: — opposed to adverse.
☞ The prevailing usage now is to employ to after averse and its derivatives rather than from, as was formerly the usage. In this the word agrees with its kindred terms, hatred, dislike, dissimilar, contrary, repugnant, etc., expressing a relation or an affection of the mind to an object.
Syn. — See ADVERSE, RELUCTANT.

a-ver'sion (a-vûr'shŭn), n. [L. aversio: cf. F. aversion. See AVERT.] 1. A turning away. Obs.
Adhesion to vice and aversion from goodness. Bp. Atterbury
2. Act of averting, or getting rid of; esp., a ceremonial of primitive religion for dispelling noxious spirits.
3. A state of mind in which attention to an object is coupled with dislike of it and desire of turning from it.
It is common to say that a person has an aversion for a thing, when he is really not feeling any aversion at all, when, indeed, he may not even be thinking of the thing. . . . The aversion itself only exists when it is being felt. G. F. Stout.
☞ Aversion is now generally followed by to before the object. [See AVERSE.] Sometimes towards and for are found; from is now rare.
A freeholder is bred with an aversion to subjection. Addison.
His aversion towards the house of York. Bacon.
It is not difficult for a man to see that a person has conceived an aversion for him Spectator.
4. Antipathy or opposition in qualities.
5. An object of dislike or repugnance.
Syn. — Dislike, repugnance, disgust. See ANTIPATHY.

A-ves'ta (a-vĕs'tă), n. The sacred books of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and of the modified form of it which still survives among the Parsis of Persia and India; — called also Zend-Avesta. The Avesta consists of four chief divisions, or groups of texts, all more or less fragmentary and varying in antiquity. These are · the Yasna, which is the chief liturgical work and includes the Gathas or hymns ascribed to Zoroaster himself, forming thus the oldest portion of the Avesta; the Vispered, a supplementary ritual; the Yashts, which are hymns to angels or lesser divinities; the Vendidad, which contains the account of creation, historical and homiletic matter. There are also minor divisions, including hymns, praises, prayers, etc. See ZOROASTRIANISM

Av·i-cen'nism (ăv'ĭ-sĕn'ĭz'm), n. The doctrines of the Arabian philosopher Avicenna (Ibn Sina), 980–1037 A. D., who taught that universals are in the mind of God before things; in things in so far as the universal has been actualized in matter; after things in so far as our intellect abstracts the form from the things existing. He held that the active intellect in God thinks, and in thinking causes beings to exist; first he causes the active intellect to exist in the world, and from it descends the chain of emanation down to lower orders of being. Avicenna in general follows Alfarabi (d. 950 A. D.); and unlike Averroës, who came a century and a half later, he held that the rational soul of man survives the body and is not absorbed. W. T. Harris.

His books were received and read with avidity. Milward.

2. Chem. The strength of an acid or base, or its capability of displacing other acids or bases from their salts, measured under strictly equitable conditions, as in aqueous solutions in cases where no product leaves the field of action. It is dependent upon the dissociation. Strength, as commonly used, is often not the same as avidity. Thus, hydrochloric acid has greater avidity than sulphuric acid, yet the latter is often spoken of as being the stronger acid because, being less volatile, it can displace hydrochloric acid from its salts.

Syn.—See CUPIDITY.

a'vi-fau'na (ā'vĭ-fô'nă), n. [NL.; L. avis bird + E. fauna.] Zool. The birds, or all the kinds of birds, considered collectively, of a given region.—a'vi-fau'nal (-năl), a.

A'vi-gnon' ber'ry (ă'vē-nyôN'; ă-vĭn'yŏn), Bot. The fruit of any of several European species of Rhamnus, esp. R. infectoria;—so called from the city of Avignon, in France. It is used by dyers and painters for coloring yellow.

av'o-cate (ăv'ō-kāt), v. t.; AV'O-CAT'ED (kāt'ĕd); AV'O-CAT'ING. [L. avocatus, p. p. of avocare; a, ab + vocare to call. See VOCAL, a.] To call off or away; to withdraw; to transfer to another tribunal; to advocate. Obs.

One who avocateth his mind from other occupations. Barrow.

av'o-ca'tion (ăv'ō-kā'shŭn), n. [L. avocatio.] 1. A calling away; a diversion. Obs. or Archaic.

Impulses to duty, and powerful avocations from sin. South.

2. State of being called away; diversion of attention; distraction.

3. That which calls one away from one's regular employment or vocation; a subordinate occupation.

Heaven is his vocation, and therefore he counts earthly employments avocations. Fuller.

4. (Usually in pl.) Customary employment; vocation, usual pursuits; — a use that is unfortunate because it does away with the useful distinction between avocation and vocation.

The use of avocation for vocation is gaining ground, but good writers commonly avoid it. In the plural, however, avocations has established itself in the sense of "regular and habitual pursuits." Gardner, Kittredge, Arnold.

5. = ADVOCATION, 1.

Syn.—See VOCATION.

a-voc'a-to-ry (a-vŏk'a-tō-rĭ), a. Summoning away or back, as, an avocatory letter; avocating.

av'o-cet, av'o-set (ăv'ō-sĕt), n. [F. avocette, fr. It. avosetta] Any of several limicoline birds of the genus Recurvirostra. They have long legs, webbed feet, and a slender upwardly curved bill. The American species (R. americana) is found chiefly in the western and southern States and is rapidly becoming scarce.

A'vo-ga'dro's hypoth'e-sis (ä'vō-gä'drōz). Chem. The hypothesis that equal volumes of all gases at the same temperature and pressure contain equal numbers of molecules; — called also Avogadro's law. It is based on Gay-Lussac's law and is a fundamental conception of modern chemistry. It was announced in 1811 by the Italian scientist Avogadro. It was formulated independently by Ampère in 1814, whence it has sometimes been called Ampere's law.

a-void' (ă-vоid'), v. t.; A-VOID'ED; A-VOID'ING. [OF. esvuidier; es (L. ex) + vuidier, voidier, to empty, F. vider. See VOID, a.] 1. To make empty, to empty. Obs. Wycliffe.

2. To eject or throw out; to remove; also, to emit, to void; as, to avoid excretions. Obs. Sir T. Browne.

3. To betake (one's self) away; quit or evacuate; depart or withdraw from. Obs. or Archaic. Cursor Mundi.

4. To extricate one's self from (a fallen horse); to dismount from (a horse). Obs.

Sir Gareth smote the duke down from his horse. But the duke lightly avoided his horse, and dressed his shield and drew his sword. Malory.

5. To make void, to annul or vacate; to refute.

How can these grants of the king's be avoided? Spenser.

6. Pleading. To defeat or evade; to invalidate. Thus, in a replication, the plaintiff may deny the defendant's plea, or confess it, and avoid it by stating new matter.

7. To keep away from; to keep clear of; to endeavor not to meet; to shun; to abstain from; as, to avoid evil.

And run to meet what he would most avoid? Milton.

He carefully avoided every act which could goad them into open hostility Macaulay.

8. To drive away; to expel; to get rid of. Obs. Shak.

Syn.—Escape, elude, evade, eschew.—AVOID, SHUN agree in the idea of keeping away from something, or out of contact with it, and may frequently be interchanged. But shun, more than avoid, carries with it the suggestion of shrinking, or even abhorrence, with regard to the thing kept clear of; as, to avoid meeting some one; to shun something as one would the plague; "O, that way madness lies; let me shun that" (Shak.). See EVADE, ABSTAIN.

My engraving . . . in which the draftsman has done his best to avoid flattery. Lamb

So let me, if you do not shudder at me, Nor shun to call me sister, dwell with you. Tennyson.

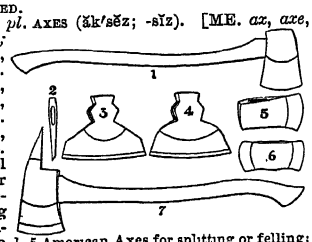
ax, axe (ăks), n.; pl. AXES (ăk'sēz; -sĭz). [ME. ax, axe, AS. eax, æx, acas; akin to D. akse, OS. accus, OHG. acchus, G. axt, Icel. öx, Sw. yxe, Dan. okse, Goth. aqizi, Gr. ἀξίνη, and perh. Lat. ascia.] 1. A tool or instrument for felling trees, chopping and splitting wood, hewing timber, etc.; as, the broad*ax,* fireman's ax, double-bitted ax, battle ax, etc. In modern axes the head is of steel, or of iron with a steel edge or blade. This is wielded by a wooden helve or handle, so fixed in a socket or eye as to be in the same plane with the blade.



1, 5 American Axes for splitting or felling; 3, 4 Broadaxes, 2 Section of 3 showing edge; 6 Double-bitted Ax; 7 Fireman's Ax an ax to grind, a secret or selfish purpose to promote. Colloq.

2. A hammer with a sharp, or chisel, edge for dressing or spalling stone; an axhammer.

☞ "The spelling ax is better on every ground, of etymology, phonology, and analogy, than axe." Oxf. E. D.

When I see a merchant over polite to his customers . . . thinks I, that man has an ax to grind. Chas. Miner.

ax, axe, v. t. To dress or trim with an ax.

The effect of axing [stone] is to cover the surface with chisel marks, which are made parallel as far as possible.

Siebert & Biggin

ax, or axe, eye. An eye such as that made for an ax.

ax'break'er, axe'break'er (ăks'brāk'ẽr), n. An Australian oleaceous tree (Notelæa longifolia) having very hard wood. See NOTELÆA.

axed (ăkst). 1. pret., p. p., & p. a. of AX, v.

2. a. [See -ED.] Provided with an ax or axes.

ax'ham'mer (-hăm'ẽr), n. A stone ax having two opposite cutting edges, used for dressing or spalling the rougher kinds of stone.

ax'ham'mered (-ẽrd), p. a. Finished with an axhammer; axed; — said of stone. See AX, v. t.

ax'i-al (ăk'sĭ-ăl), a. 1. Of or pertaining to an axis; of the nature of, or resembling, an axis; around an axis.

To take on an axial, and not an equatorial, direction. Nichol.

2. Anat. Of or pertaining to an axis, esp. the main axis of the body, or the axis vertebra.

axial-flow turbine. See TURBINE. — axial group. See QUADRATIC GROUP. — a. line, Magnetism, the line taken by the magnetic force in passing from one pole of a horseshoe magnet to the other. Faraday. — a. pencil, or pencil of planes, Geom., a system of planes intersecting on a straight line called the axis or base of the pencil. — a. skeleton, the skeleton of the head and trunk; — opposed to the appendicular skeleton, or that of the limbs.

ax'il (ăk'sĭl), n. [L. axilla armpit. Cf. AXLE.] Bot. The distal angle or point of divergence between a branch or leaf and the axis from which it springs.

ax-il'la (ăk-sĭl'ȧ), n.; L. pl. AXILLÆ (-ē). [L.] 1. Anat. The armpit, or the cavity beneath the junction of the arm and shoulder. It contains the axillary artery and vein, a part of the brachial nerve plexus, and many lymph nodes, with much fat and areolar tissue.

2. Bot. An axil.

ax'il-lar (ăk'sĭ-lăr), a. [Cf. F. axillaire] Axillary.

ax'il-lar, n. 1. Zoöl. One of the innermost feathers lining the under surface of the wing; — usually in pl. In many water birds they are long and stiff in comparison with the surrounding plumage.

2. Anat. An axillary vein.

ax'il-la-ry (-lă-rĭ), a. [See AXIL.] 1. Anat. Of or pertaining to the axilla, or armpit.

2. Bot. Situated in, or rising from, an axil; also, pertaining to an axil; as, axillary buds.

axillary artery, Anat., that part of the main artery of the arm that lies in the axilla. It is a continuation of the subclavian above and the brachial below. — a. gland, Anat., any of the numerous lymph nodes of the axilla. — a. vein, Anat., the large vein passing through the axilla, a direct continuation of the basilic below and the subclavian above.

ax'in (ăk'sĭn), n. [Cf. Sp. axina.] Chem. A fatty substance secreted by a Mexican scale insect (Llaveia axinus), used for making a varnish, and, in medicine, as a vulnerary and resolvent.

ax'i-nite (ăk'sĭ-nīt), n. [Gr. ἀξίνη an ax.] Min. A borosilicate of aluminium and calcium, with varying amounts of iron and manganese, commonly in brown glassy triclinic crystals with sharp edges. H., 6.5-7. Sp. gr., 3.27-3.29.

ax'i-o-lite (ăk-sĭ'ō-līt), n. [axis + -lite.] Petrog. A spherulitic aggregate with grouping about a line or axis instead of a point, often seen in glassy rocks. — ax'i-o-lit'ic (-lĭt'ĭk), a.

ax'i-om (ăk'sĭ-ŭm), n. [L. axioma, Gr. ἀξίωμα that which is thought worthy, that which is assumed, a basis of demonstration, a principle, fr. ἀξιοῦν to think worthy, fr. ἄξιος worthy, weighing as much as; cf. ἄγειν to lead, drive, also to weigh so much: cf. F. axiome. See AGENT.] 1. Logic & Math. A self-evident truth, or a proposition whose truth is so evident that no reasoning or demonstration can make it plainer; a proposition which it is necessary to take for granted; as, "The whole is greater than a part," "A thing cannot, at the same time, be and not be."

2. An established principle in some art or science, which, though not a necessary truth, is universally received, as, the axioms of political economy.

Syn. — Saw, byword, dictum, precept, motto. — AXIOM, MAXIM, APHORISM, APOTHEGM, ADAGE, PROVERB, SAYING agree in denoting a sententious expression of a general truth. An AXIOM, as here compared (see PRINCIPLE), is a self-evident or universally accepted truth taken for granted as the basis of reasoning; as, the axioms of geometry. A MAXIM is a rule or precept sanctioned by experience, and relating especially to the practical concerns of life; as, "they should be realizing their high maxims in the concrete" (J. H. Newman), "the difference between principles as universal laws, and maxims of conduct as prudential rules" (H. C. Robinson). An APHORISM is a short and pithy sentence expressing some general truth or sentiment; as, "the great aphorism, that there is an external world" (J. H. Newman). An APOTHEGM is a terse and sententious aphorism, as, "They [apothegms] are . . . pomted speeches. . . . Cicero prettily calleth them salmas, salt pits, that you may extract salt out of, and sprinkle it where you will" (Bacon). An ADAGE is a saying of long-established authority and universal application; as, "If there is verity in wine, according to the old adage" (Thackeray). A PROVERB is an adage couched, usually, in homely and vividly concrete phrase; as, "accused (in the phrase of a homely proverb) of being 'penny wise and pound foolish'" (Spectator). A SAYING is a brief current or habitual expression of whatever form; as, "The saying is true, 'The empty vessel makes the greatest sound'" (Shak.); "Cosmus, Duke of Florence, had a desperate saying against perfidious or neglecting friends" (Bacon). See COMMONPLACE, DICTATE, DOCTRINE.

axiom of parallels. = PARALLEL POSTULATE. — axioms of continuity, Math., the axiom of Archimedes, that by laying off a given segment (however small) a finite number of times any assigned point on a line may be attained or surpassed; and the axiom of completeness, that the system of elements (points, lines, planes) cannot be enlarged by adjoining other elements while maintaining all other axioms. — axioms of order, Math., those (4 in Hilbert's scheme) that deal with the interrelations of points on a line, and also Pasch's axiom (which see).

ax'i-o-mat'ic (ăk'sĭ-ō-măt'ĭk) } a. [Gr. ἀξιωματικός.] Of, ax'i-o-mat'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } pertaining to, or having the nature of, an axiom; self-evident; characterized by, or abounding in, axioms; aphoristic. "Axiomatical truth." Johnson. — ax'i-o-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.

The stores of axiomatic wisdom. I. Taylor.

ax'is (ăk'sĭs), n.; pl. AXES (-sēz). [L. axis axis, axle, akin to Gr. ἄξων axle, Skr. aksha, AS. eax, E. ax in axtree, and prob. to L. axilla armpit, shoulder joint, ala wing. Cf. AXLE, AISLE.] 1. Axle of a wheel. Obs. or R.

2. A straight line, real or imaginary, passing through a body, on which it revolves, or may be supposed to revolve, a line passing through a body or system around which the parts are symmetrically arranged.

3. Math. A straight line with respect to which the different parts of a magnitude are symmetrically arranged; as, the axis of a cylinder, that is, the straight line joining the centers of the two bases; the axis of a cone, or of a regular pyramid, that is, the straight line joining the vertex and the center of the base, the axis of a circle, the straight line passing through the center perpendicular to the plane of the circle.

4. Specif.: a Anat. (1) The second vertebra of the neck of the higher vertebrates, which is prolonged anteriorly within the foramen of the first vertebra or atlas, so as to form the odontoid process or peg, which serves as a pivot for the atlas and head to turn upon. In amphibians the first vertebra has the form and function of the axis, and is often so called; and the atlas is believed to be fused with the skull. See ODONTOID and ATLAS, 3. (2) Any of various central, fundamental, or axial parts; as, the cerebrospinal axis, the cœliac axis. b Paleon. The median region of a segment of a trilobite. c Bot. The stem; the central part, or longitudinal support, on which organs are arranged; the hypothetical central line of any body. d Cryst. One of several imaginary lines assumed in describing the position of the planes by which a crystal is bounded. e Fine Arts. (1) An imaginary line supposed to pass through a design, to which are referred the different parts of the design. There are often a primary axis and a secondary axis. (2) In an architectural or other working drawing, a line actually drawn and used as the basis of measurements.

axes of coördinates in a plane, Geom., two straight lines intersecting each other, to which points are referred for the purpose of determining their relative position; they are either rectangular or oblique and are called axis of abscissas and axis of ordinates. See ABSCISSA. — axes of coördinates in space, Geom., the three straight lines in which the coordinate planes intersect each other. — axes of elasticity, Min., in biaxial crystals, three axes having the directions in which the velocity of light through the crystal is at its maximum, mean, and minimum; — so called from the assumption that the velocity depends on the variable elasticity of the ether. — axis in peritrochio (pĕr'ĭ-trō'kĭ-ō), the wheel and axle, one of the mechanical powers. — a. of a balance, that line about which it turns. — a. of a complex, Math., a line that the complex may be rotated round or slipped along and remain always self-coincident. — axis of a curve, Geom., a straight line that bisects at right angles a system of parallel chords. It thus divides the curve into two symmetrical portions, as in the parabola, which has one such axis, the ellipse, which has two, or the circle, which has an infinite number. The two axes of the ellipse are the major axis and the minor axis, and the two axes of the hyperbola are the transverse axis and the conjugate axis. — a. of a gun, the axis, or middle line, of the cylinder of the bore of the gun — a. of a lens, the straight line passing through its optic center perpendicular to the plane of the lens. — a. of a pencil of planes. Geom. See AXIAL PENCIL. — a. of a quaternion, Math., a unit vector perpendicular to the plane of the quaternion. — a. of a regular pyramid, Geom., a straight line drawn from the vertex to the center of the base. — a. of a spherical mirror, Physics, any right line passing through the center of curvature of the mirror. That axis which passes also through the center of the mirror is the principal axis, all others being secondary axes. — a. of a telescope or microscope, the straight line coinciding with the axes of the several lenses which compose it. — a. of collimation. Same as line of collimation, under LINE. — a. of collimation, Math., a self-correspondent line in a projective transformation. — a. of elevation, Geol., the medial line or crest of an uplifted ridge of the earth's crust. — a. of homology. See HOMOLOGY. — a. of oscillation (of a pendulum), a right line passing through the center about which it vibrates, and perpendicular to the plane of vibration. It is made up of those points whose movement is free and unaffected by their connection with the rest of the system. — a. of polarization, Optics, the central line around which the prismatic rings or curves are arranged. — a. of refraction, Physics, a line perpendicular to the surface of the refracting medium at the point of incidence. — a. of revolution. See REVOLUTION. — a. of rotation. See ROTATION. — a. of similitude, Geom., any of four lines joining a center of similitude of the first and second of three circles with a center of similitude of the second and third, which is found to pass through a center of similitude of the first and third. — a. of symmetry, Geom., any line in a plane figure that divides the figure into two such parts that one part, when folded over along the axis, shall coincide with the other part. — a. of the equator, ecliptic, horizon (or other circle of the celestial sphere), that diameter of the sphere which is perpendicular to the plane of the circle.

ax'is (ăk'sĭs), n. [L. axis.] 1 A deer (Cervus, subgenus Axis, axis), of India and other parts of southern Asia, having rusine antlers and white-spotted body; — called also axis deer.

Axis Deer.

2. [cap] Zool. The subgenus containing the above species, and the allied hog deer (Cervus porcinus).

axis cylinder. Anat. The neuraxis; the central essential portion of every nerve fiber. It is a protoplasmic process of a nerve cell and transmits the nervous impulse.

ax'i-sym-met'ric (ăk'sĭ-sĭ-mĕt'rĭk), a. Designating symmetry with reference to an axis.

axisymmetric determinant, Math., one in which all conjugate constituents are equal in pairs.

ax'le (ăk's'l), n. [ME. axel in axeltre, fr. Icel. öxultrē; öxull axle (akin to AS. eax; see AXTREE) + trē (akin to E. tree; see TREE). See AXIS.] 1. The pin or spindle on which a wheel revolves, or which revolves with a wheel.

2. A transverse bar or shaft connecting the opposite wheels of a car or carriage; an axletree.

3. An axis; as, the sun's axle.

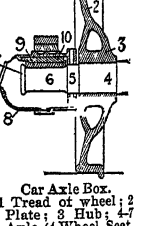
Section of Wagon Hub, showing Axle Box and Axle.

2. The journal box of a rotating axle, esp. a railroad axle. In railroad-car construction, the axle guard, or pedestal, with the superincumbent weight, rests on the top of the box (usually with a spring intervening), and holds it in place by flanges. The box rests upon the journal bearing and key, which intervene between the inner top of the box and the axle.

axle guard. A guide in which an axle box may slide up and down, as with the play of the springs in a railroad car.



Car Axle Box.
1 Tread of wheel; 2 Plate; 3 Hub; 4-7 Axle (4 Wheel Seat, 5 Dust Guard, 6 Journal, 7 Collar); 8 Oil Box; 9, 10 Bearing.

ax'le-tree' (-trē'), n. [Icel. öxultrē. See AXLE.] 1. A bar or beam of wood or iron, connecting the opposite wheels of a carriage, on the ends of which the wheels revolve.

2. A spindle or axle of a wheel. Obs.

3. An axis. Obs.

Ax'min-ster (ăks'mĭn-stẽr), n., or Axminster carpet. A More fully chenille Axminster. A variety of Turkey carpet, woven by machine or, when more than 27 inches wide, on a hand loom, and consisting of strips of worsted chenille so colored as to produce a pattern on a stout jute backing. It has a fine soft pile. So called from Axminster, England, where it was formerly made (1755-1835). b A similar but cheaper machine-made carpet, resembling moquette in construction and appearance, but finer and of better material.

ax'ode (ăk'sōd), n. [axis + 2d -ode.] Kinematics. The Ayles'bur-y (ālz'bẽr-ĭ), n. [From Aylesbury, England.] One of a breed of domestic ducks much raised in the United States, but originating in England. They have white plumage, a long pinkish bill, long body and neck, and orange legs.

Ay'ma-ra' (ī'mȧ-rä'), n. An Indian of a race of Quichuan linguistic stock inhabiting the high table-lands of Bolivia. The Aymaras had developed, possibly as early as the beginning of the Christian era, a high grade of culture. Their culminating achievement was the great edifices on the shores of Lake Titicaca, which were still incomplete when they were conquered by the Incas and incorporated in the Peruvian state, about 125 years before the Spanish conquest. — Ay'ma-ran' (-rūn'), a.

Ay'mer, Pri'or (prī'ŏr ā'mẽr). In Scott's "Ivanhoe," the prior of Jorvaulx Abbey, a jovial and voluptuous priest, devoted to drinking and hunting rather than to his duties.

Ay'mon (ā'mŏn), n. In medieval romance, a duke of Dordogne, who had four sons, Renaud, the eldest and most renowned, Alard, Guiscard, and Richard, whose exploits are recounted in the Old French poem "Renaud de Montauban" (belonging to the Charlemagne cycle) and its derivatives in and out of France. In the Italian poems of chivalry by Boiardo, Ariosto, Tasso, etc., Renaud appears under the name Rinaldo, as in the earlier verse and prose forms in Italian which are indirectly from the Old French poem. The brothers incur the hostility of Charlemagne (who in the poem has taken the place originally belonging to Charles Martel), and in the warfare that follows perform prodigies of valor and are more than once besieged by their steed Bayard.

Ayr'shire (ār'shēr; -shĭr; cf. SHIRE), n. A county of Scotland.

Ayrshire Bard, Poet, or Plowman, Robert Burns, who was a native and farmer of Ayrshire. — A. Lassie. See CHECKER, n., 2.

Ayr'shire, n. [From Ayrshire, Scotland.] One of a Scotch breed of dairy cattle. Ayrshires are hardy, of medium size, and usually of a white and brown color, the patches being well defined. Their milk is especially useful for cheese making.

Ayr stone (ār). [From Ayr, Scotland.] A kind of stone used for surfacing and polishing, and as a whetstone.

‖ a-yun'ta-mien'to (a-yōōn'tȧ-myän'tō), n.; pl. -TOS (-tōs). [Sp.] 1. A municipal government.

2. The townhouse; the seat of a municipal government; esp. [cap.], the central offices of the government of the Philippines at Manila.

A-za'le-a (ȧ-zā'lē-ȧ), n.; pl. AZALEAS (-ȧz). [NL., fr. Gr. ἀζαλέος dry, — so named because supposed to grow best in dry ground.] Bot. A large genus of North American and Asiatic ericaceous shrubs, closely related to Rhododendron, but differing in having a funnel-shaped corolla and deciduous leaves. All the species have handsome flowers, varying in color from white to yellow and red. Several, as A. indica and A. pontica, are commonly cultivated; and among the native American species A. nudiflora, the pinkster flower, A. viscosa, the swamp honeysuckle, and A. lutea are familiar. Also [l. c.], any plant or flower of this genus.

az'a-role (ăz'ȧ-rōl), n. [F. azerole, fr. Ar. az-zoʻrūr: cf. It. azzeruolo, Sp. acerolo.] The pleasantly flavored fruit of the malaceous shrub Crataegus azarolus, of southern Europe; also, the shrub itself.

A-za'zel (ȧ-zā'zĕl; ăz'ȧ-zĕl), n. [Heb., 'Azāzēl.] In Lev. xvi., a name (translated "scapegoat" in the King James's Bible) connected with the ritual of atonement; in later legend, the leader of those sons of God who (as related in Gen. vi. 2-4) took wives among the daughters of men. Azazel has been variously regarded as the scapegoat sent into the wilderness for a sin atonement, as the chalky cliff over which it was pushed (thought to be Bethuddedun, about twelve miles east of Jerusalem), or as a demon of the desert. The legendary Azazel wrought such evil among men by teaching warfare, personal adornment, witchcraft, and impurity, that the archangel Raphael, at the Lord's command, bound him and chained him in the wilderness. Milton makes him an associate of Satan. Cf. EBLIS.

a-zed'a-rach (ȧ-zĕd'ȧ-răk), n. [F. azédarac, Sp. acederaque, Pers. āzāddirakht noble tree.] 1. The China tree.

2. Pharm. The bark of the roots of this tree, used as a cathartic and emetic.

az'e-la'ic (ăz'ē-lā'ĭk), a. [azo- + Gr. ἔλαιον olive oil, oil.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline dibasic acid, $CH_{16}O_4$, formed by the action of nitric acid on castor oil, Chinese wax, cork, etc.

az'ide (ăz'īd; -ĭd; 184), n. Also -id. [azo- + -ide.] Chem. A hydrazoate; also, a compound formed by the replacement of the hydrogen of hydrazoic acid by an acid radical.

az'i-muth (ăz'ĭ-mŭth), n. [ME. azimut, F. azimut, fr. Ar. as-sumūt, pl. of as-samt a way, or perh., a point of the horizon and a circle extending to it from the zenith, as being the Arabic article: cf. It. azzimutto, Pg. azimuth, and Ar. samt-ar-ras the vertex of the heaven. Cf. ZENITH.] Astron. & Geodesy. a An arc of the horizon measured clockwise between the south point of the horizon and the vertical circle passing through the center of any object; as, the azimuth of a star; the azimuth of a line in surveying. b The quadrant of an azimuth circle. Obs.

azimuth circle. 1. One of the great circles of the celestial sphere intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, — called also vertical circle.

2. A graduated circle for indicating azimuth, as one having sight vanes and screens and attached to a compass, to show magnetic azimuths.

azimuth compass. A compass resembling the mariner's compass, and having vertical sights. It is used for taking the magnetic azimuth of a heavenly body.

Azimuth Compass hung in Gimbals. B A Sights.

azimuth dial. A dial whose style or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.

az'ine (ăz'ĭn; -ēn), n. Also -in. [From AZOTE] Org. Chem. Any of a large class of compounds characterized by a six-membered ring which contains an atom of nitrogen and at least one other noncarbon atom, as of nitrogen, oxygen, or sulphur. The subclasses are distinguished as diazines (containing two nitrogen atoms in the ring), triazines (three nitrogen atoms), oxazines (one nitrogen, one oxygen), thiazines (one nitrogen, one sulphur), etc.

az'o- (ăz'ō-). [See AZOTE.] Chem. A combining form (also used adjectively, azo) sometimes loosely used to form names of compounds having nitrogen variously combined; as, *azo*litmin, *azo*methane. For specific and more customary use, see DIAZO-.

azo blue. See DYE. — a. dyes, an important and very numerous class of artificial dyes characterized by the presence of the azo group. See DIAZO-. — a. mauve, a. yellow. See DYE. benzene.] Chem. An orange-red crystalline substance, $C_6H_5{\cdot}N_2{\cdot}C_6H_5$, obtained by reducing nitrobenzene.

Lit.: Quicksilver; hence, pl. Mining. Silver ores suitable for treatment by amalgamation with mercury. Sp. Amer.

az'o-ben'zene (ăz'ō-bĕn'zēn; ăz'ō-bĕn-zēn'), n. [azo- +

a-zo'ic (ȧ-zō'ĭk), a [Gr ȧ- not + ζωή life.] Geol. Designating or pertaining to that part of geologic time which antedates life. It was formerly used as the equivalent of Archean, but there is now reason to believe that life existed during some part of the era of the Archean rocks.

az'ole (ăz'ōl; a-zōl'), n. [From AZOTE.] Org. Chem. Any of a large class of compounds characterized by a five-membered ring which contains an atom of nitrogen and at least one other noncarbon atom (nitrogen, oxygen, sulphur). The prefixes furo-, thio-, and pyrro- are used to distinguish three subclasses of azoles, which may be regarded as derived respectively from furfurane, thiophene, and pyrrol by replacement of the CH group by nitrogen; as, *furo*monazole. Names exactly analogous to those for the azines are also used; as, oxazole, diazole, etc. Cf. AZINE.

az'o-lit'min (ăz'ō-lĭt'mĭn), n. [azo- + litmus.] Chem. A nitrogenous substance, the coloring principle of litmus.

A-zol'la (ȧ-zŏl'ȧ), n. [NL.; said to be fr. Gr ἀζειν to dry + ὀλλύναι to kill.] Bot. A small genus of minute floating cryptogamic salviniaceous plants, the sporophyte consisting of pinnately branching stems with small distichous 2-lobed leaves. A. caroliniana is the only American species.

a-zo'ni-um (ȧ-zō'nĭ-ŭm), a. [azo- + -onium, as in ammonium.] Org. Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, a class of compounds (the azonium bases) possessing basic properties due to a peculiar grouping of nitrogen atoms. They have the general formula $R{<}\overset{R}{\underset{R}{N}}{>}R'$, being related to the azines as the ammonium bases are to the amines. The indulines and safranines are regarded as derivatives. Azorians. — n. A native of the Azores.

Azorian fennel, sweet fennel.

az'ot-ed (ăz'ō-tĕd; ȧ-zōt'ĕd), a. Nitrogenized; nitrogenous.

az'o-te'mi-a (ăz'ō-tē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; azote + -emia.] a Med. Excess of nitrogenous bodies in the blood. b Veter. A peculiar disease of the horse in which this symptom occurs. It is brought on by overfeeding and lack of exercise and characterized by sudden onset, profuse perspiration, paralysis of the hind quarters, and bloody urine.

az'oth (ăz'ŏth), n. [LL. azoch, azoth, or F. azoth, fr. Ar. az-zāʻūq, az-zāʻūk, mercury.] Alchemy. Mercury, esp. when regarded as the first principle of metals.

Az'tec (ăz'tĕk), a. Of or relating to the Aztecs.

Az'tec, n. 1. An Indian of the Nahuatlan tribe, which founded and developed the Mexican empire conquered by Cortez in 1519. According to tradition, the Aztecs came from the northwest, and after several centuries of wandering reached the valley of Mexico early in the 14th century. Tenochtitlan (the city of Mexico) was founded about 1325, and thenceforward until the conquest the history of the empire was one of constant aggrandizement. The Aztecs absorbed and developed the advanced culture of their Toltec and Chichimec predecessors, but their civilization was marred by hideous human sacrifice, maintained on a scale probably never equaled elsewhere.
2. An Indian of Aztecan or Nahuatlan stock; loosely, any Indian of the territories under Aztec influence.
Under the collective name of Aztecs or Nahua are comprised several peoples and tribes who . . occupied the Pacific slope from Rio de Fuerte (26th degree of N. lat.) to the frontiers of Guatemala, with the exception of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. J. Deniker.

baa (ba), n.; pl. BAAS (băz). The cry or bleating of a sheep; a bleat.

Ba'al (bā'ăl), n.; Heb. pl. BAALIM (bā'ă-lĭm). [Heb. ba'al lord.] 1. Any of a multitude of local deities of the ancient Semitic races, each distinguished by the name of his own place or of some distinctive character or attribute. Each town, sanctuary, natural object, or quality which had a religious significance for the worshipers had its own Baal; and the various Baals were not differentiations of one god, but apparently originally distinct local deities. These were probably of diverse character; but in general they were regarded as the authors of the fertility of the soil and the increase of the flocks, and were worshiped by agricultural festivals and by offerings of fruits and the young of the flocks. There was a Baal of Tyre, of Sidon, of Tarsus, of Lebanon, etc.; but the Baals of chief interest are: Melkarth, the Baal of Tyre, sometimes called simply Baal in the Bible, and Baalzebub (2 Kings i), which means literally (in the Hebrew) "Lord of Flies," but by some is considered to be a contemptuous Jewish modification of the true name, perhaps of Baal-zebul, "Lord of the High House." The sanctuaries or altars of Baal were frequently called high places (Heb. Bamŏth); the priests (in Hebrew called Chemarim) represented the learned section of the nation, and frequently, as at Babylon, regulated and controlled all departments of civil life. See HIGH PLACE, ASHERAH, MASSEBAH, MOLOCH. The worship of the Baal of Tyre (Melkarth) was introduced among the Israelite settlers by Ahab, and Jehovah himself was at one time called Baal. The name of Baal became a common element in Semitic names of places and persons; as, Baal-hermon, Baal-peor, Hannibal ("favor of Baal"), Hasdrubal ("help of Baal"), etc.
2 Fig.: A false god; an idol.

Ba'al-ism (bā'ăl-ĭz'm), n. Worship of Baal; idolatry. — Ba'al-ish, a. — Ba'al-ist (-ĭst), Ba'al-ite (-ĭt), n. — Ba'al-it'i-cal (-ĭt'ĭ-kăl), a. — Ba'al-ize (-īz), v. t.

Bab'y-lo'ni-an, n. 1. An inhabitant of the ancient kingdom of Babylonia. The originators of the Babylonian civilization are supposed by many authorities to have been the so-called Akkadians or Sumerians, of unknown origin; but very early in history Semites of the northern branch became the dominant race, and so continued until the Persian conquest, 539 A. D. The Assyrians who for some centuries held dominion over Babylonia were closely allied to them in race. See ASSYRIAN, AKKADIAN.

Distinctive of the Babylonians, although adopted by other people, was their mode of writing in wedgelike characters, which, however, is far from representing the original ideographs. Distinctive of them especially were their culture, their inventive genius, their intellectual enterprise, and love of knowledge. Duct. of Bible (Hastings).

2. The language of Babylonia, specimens of which are preserved, dating from 3500 B. C. Babylonia possessed an extensive literature, chiefly commercial and religious, written in cuneiform characters upon tablets of baked clay, many thousands of which are preserved in modern museums. See CODE OF HAMMURABI, GILGAMESH EPIC, SEMITIC.

3. An astrologer; — so called because the Babylonians were famous for knowledge of astrology. Cf. CHALDÆAN.

4. A Roman Catholic; — used in contempt. Obs.

ba'con-y (bā'k'n-ĭ), a. Resembling bacon; characterized by fat like bacon; fatty; as, bacony liver.

bac-te'ri-a (băk-tē'rĭ-ă), n. pl. [NL. See BACTERIUM.] A remarkable group of vegetable microörganisms of the class Schizomycetes (which see). They are widely distributed, occurring in air, water, and soil, as well as in the bodies of living animals and plants and in products derived from them. The lower forms are simple unicellular masses of protoplasm without a definite nucleus, and are often provided with flagella or cilia by means of which they move about. Being also destitute of chlorophyll, they are parasites or saprophytes. Reproduction is effected very rapidly by simple fission or division; some species also form asexual resting spores. Bacteria rarely exceed a micromillimeter in breadth, or their smallest diameter, so that thousands may be found in a single drop. The higher forms are filamentous, and show a certain advance in the method of spore production. Bacteria are popularly grouped in three classes according to their shape: cocci, or minute spherical cells; bacilli, rod-shaped cells; and spirilla, spiral filaments. In the economy of life these organisms are of the highest importance. Many species are active agents in converting dead organic matter into soluble food materials for plants; some oxidize nitrites to nitrates, and others possess the power of fixing atmospheric nitrogen; many are concerned in the various processes of fermentation, and a large group are pathogenic, giving rise to various diseases in man and animals as well as plants. See BACILLUS, BACTERIUM, INFECTION, IMMUNITY, TOXIN.

Bacteria, showing: (1) Micrococcus pyogenes, the common organism of suppuration; (2) Streptococcus erysipelatos, of erysipelas; (3) Bacillus anthracis, of anthrax; (4) Bacillus tuberculosis, of tuberculosis; (5) B. typhi, of typhoid fever; (6) B. diphtheriæ, of diphtheria; (7) B. tetani, of tetanus; (8) B. subtilis, common in hay infusions, showing spores and method of flagellation; (9) Spirillum undula, common in stagnant water; (10) Bacterium anthracis, of anthrax or splenic fever, with spores; (11) Cladothrix dichotoma, one of the higher forms of filamentous bacteria common in impure water, showing false branching and reproductive bodies which escape from the ends of the filaments as motile cells or swarm spores. All × 1000.

bac-te'ri-al (băk-tē'rĭ-ăl), a. Pertaining to, or consisting of, bacteria in the widest sense; resulting from, or caused by, bacteria; as, a bacterial cell; a bacterial disease.

bac-te'ri-cide (-sīd), n. [bacterium + -cide.] A substance which destroys bacteria. — bac-te'ri-cid'al (-sīd'ăl), a.

bac-te'ri-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n. An expert in bacteriology.

bac-te'ri-ol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [bacterio- + -logy.] The science which deals with the study of bacteria. It is a branch of botany; but some of its most important practical relations are with hygiene, medicine, and agriculture.

bac-te'ri-o-ly'sin (-ō-lī'sĭn), n. [See BACTERIOLYSIS.] Physiol. Chem. A substance or body capable of breaking down bacterial cells. See SIDE-CHAIN THEORY.

bac-te'ri-ol'y-sis (-sĭs), n. [NL., bacterio- + -lysis.] a Chemical decomposition brought about by bacteria without the addition of oxygen. b The destruction or dissolution of bacterial cells. — bac-te'ri-o-lyt'ic (-ō-lĭt'ĭk), a.

bac-te'ri-o-pur'pu-rin (-pûr'pū-rĭn), n. [bacterio- + purpurin.] Physiol. Chem. A red coloring matter present in some bacteria. It has the power of reducing highly oxidized compounds by absorption of certain rays of light.

bac-te'ri-o'sis (-ō'sĭs), n. [NL. See BACTERIUM; -OSIS.] Hort. Any bacterial disease of plants.

bac-te'ri-um (băk-tē'rĭ-ŭm), n. ; pl. -RIA (-ă). [NL., fr. Gr. βακτήριον, dim. of βάκτρον a staff.] 1. [cap.] Bacteriol. A large genus of bacteria typifying the family Bacteriaceæ, and distinguished from Bacillus mainly by the absence of cilia. This distinction is, however, in a measure artificial, as certain forms pass through both motile and nonmotile stages. The genus includes both harmless or beneficial and pathogenic species. Of the latter, B. pneumoniæ and B. pneumonicum are concerned with diseases of the lungs; B. tuberculosis is the source of tuberculosis; B. anthracis, of anthrax; B. lepræ, of leprosy; B. syphilidis, of syphilis; B. influenzæ, of grip or influenza; B. diphtheriæ of diphtheria; many others cause diseases in animals and still others in plants. The most important of

Syn. — Poor, inferior, defective, imperfect; pernicious, deleterious, detrimental, noxious, baneful, mischievous, injurious, hurtful; immoral, corrupt, vicious; wrong, sinful, criminal, iniquitous, nefarious. — BAD, EVIL, ILL, WICKED, NAUGHTY. Of these words, BAD alone is now used in a privative sense, frequently implying little more than the defect or absence of good qualities, or lack of value; as, a bad correspondent, bad English, bad debts, a bad job. Positively, bad frequently applies to that which is injurious or hurtful (as, bad for the health, a bad fall), and particularly to that which is in its nature morally reprehensible; as, a bad man, bad conduct, bad language. EVIL is now chiefly applied to what is morally bad (rarely, in present usage, to persons); it has frequently a more or less sinister or baleful connotation; as, evil deeds, an evil life, the evil eye; "evil dreams" (Tennyson); "shaking his evil head . . . as he darkly leered at her" (Dickens). ILL (see SICK), as a synonym for evil, occurs in modern usage chiefly in a few combinations, such as ill will, ill temper, ill nature, an ill wind, etc. Its chief use is adverbial. WICKED implies the actual contravention or violation of moral law; as, "God is angry with the wicked every day" (Ps. vii. 11), wicked designs. bal'ance (bāl'ăns), n. [ME. balaunce, F. balance, fr. L. bilanx, bilancis, having two scales; bis twice (akin to E two) + lanx plate, scale.] 1. An instrument for weighing; specif.: a In its simplest (and oldest) form, a beam or lever supported exactly in the middle, having two scales or pans of equal weight suspended from its extremities. Balances adapted to very accurate work are called balances of precision, and have many refinements. The fulcrum of the beam is a knife-edge, turning on a smooth plate of agate or polished steel which forms the top of the supporting pillar. To the middle of the beam is attached a long vertical pointer which moves over a graduated scale at the base. The sensitiveness of such a balance is expressed in terms of the deflection produced by the addition of a certain small weight, as a milligram. The beam itself is graduated and a rider is used in the final adjustment of each weighing. According to the length of the beam, the balance is spoken of as a long-arm balance or short-arm balance. Weighings can be made more quickly on a short-arm balance, but, other things being equal, it is not so sensitive as a long-arm instrument. All the metal parts are noncorrodible and the balance is protected from drafts by a glass case. The analytical, assay, and bullion balances are examples (see these). b An instrument based on the same principle (that of a simple lever), but differing from the simple form by inequality of the arms, the use of a sliding weight, or in some other way. The alloy balance, Danish balance, Roman balance or steelyard, and the ordinary grocer's scales are examples. c A device for weighing depending on a combination of levers (platform scales), or based on buoyancy (Nicholson's balance), or based on the elasticity of a spring (the spiral, or spring, balance), or some other principle.

Balance of Precision. 1 Handle to move Rider 3, on Beam 2, 4, 4 Knife-edges; 5 Pointer; 6, 6 Scale pans; 7 Knob to raise knife-edges from plate; 8 Device to release scale pans, 9, 9 Leveling screws.

2. An apparatus in which there is a balance of forces or resistances, as the actinic, or thermic, balance (see BOLOMETER), electric balance, induction balance, steam balance, and torsion balance (which see).

3. Fig.. a The imaginary balance by which Justice determines her decisions, or by which Fortune determines the uncertain fates of men; the means by which actions, principles, etc., are weighed or estimated.

Balance, 6.

6. Horol. A vibrating wheel operating in conjunction with a hairspring to regulate the movement of a timepiece. It now usually has adjustable screws on its rim for altering at will its moment of inertia (and therefore its time of vibration) and its temperature compensation.

7. A weight used as a counterbalance in weighing, a counterpoise, a makeweight, the preponderating weight or amount.

> If France . . had ceased to be a balance to Spain, she found a new balance in Flanders J. R. Green.
> In Germany the balance of unjust interference lay on the imperial side Froude

8. State of equipoise between the weights in opposite scales, hence, equipoise or equilibrium of any opposing forces, physical or otherwise; equilibrium; steadiness, stability; equal or harmonious effect; even adjustment.

> And hung a bottle on each side
> The order and balance of the country were destroyed Buckle

9. An equality between the sums total of the two sides of an account; also, the excess on either side. "A balance at the banker's." Thackeray.

12. Mil. In naval infantry practice, the center of gravity of a rifle with the bayonet unfixed. U. S.

Syn. — Equanimity, composure, sanity, serenity — BALANCE, EQUILIBRIUM, POISE, EQUIPOISE, COUNTERPOISE come into comparison chiefly in their figurative senses. BALANCE and EQUILIBRIUM imply somewhat distinctly the opposing influences or forces whose resultant they are; POISE and EQUIPOISE suggest a state or position more self-centered and assured. COUNTERPOISE applies usually to one of the balancing forces, but is sometimes synonymous with equilibrium. See EQUANIMITY, CONFIDENCE.

> I went through my reaction so . . violently that I have been settling backward towards equilibrium ever since Lowell balance of power, Politics, such an adjustment of power among sovereign states that no one state is in a position to interfere with the independence of the others; international equilibrium. — b. of torsion. = TORSION BALANCE. — b. of trade, the net profit or loss to any given party from a series of trading transactions. As ordinarily understood: The difference between the total of the purchases and sales of a nation during a given period, taken as: a In the "mercantile" theory, the net amount of precious metals shipped from one country to another during a year or any other specified period. The balance was said to be favorable in case of an excess of imports of precious metals, and adverse in the opposite case. b In more recent times, the difference between the total exports and total imports of a country, favorable if there was an excess of exports, and adverse if there was an excess of imports. c The balancing item in the account of all commercial transactions between two countries or groups of countries in a given period.

bal'ance (bāl'ăns), v. t.; BAL'ANCED (-ănst); BAL'ANC-ING (-ăn-sĭng). [From BALANCE, n.; cf. F. balancer.] 1 To weigh in a balance; to estimate the weight of; to ponder

2. To weigh (two things) by each other; to compare in relative force, importance, value, etc.; to estimate.

"Banish all offense." Shak.
5. To clear or free (from or of); to empty. Obs.
Syn.— BANISH, EXILE, TRANSPORT, EXPEL agree in the idea of enforced removal. To be BANISHED is to be compelled, by public edict or sentence, to leave a country (which may or may not be one's own) either permanently or for a fixed time, and with or without restriction to a given place. EXILE differs from banishment in applying to removal under constraint from one's own country only; in admitting compulsion of circumstances as well as formal sentence or decree; and in emphasizing the element of enforced absence rather than the expulsion itself. Thus, Russians and foreigners alike may be banished, but only Russians exiled to Siberia; Dante was banished from his native Florence, and spent his later years in exile. Exile is also loosely used for prolonged but voluntary absence from one's native land in the fulfillment of some purpose; as, "That voluntary exile of so many years which is such a curious element in Ibsen's biography" (E. W. Gosse). TRANSPORT, as here compared, refers specifically to the banishment of convicts, usually to a penal colony. To EXPEL is to eject or banish summarily or authoritatively, commonly under circumstances of disgrace; it applies to ejection from institutions or societies, as well as from a place or country; as, to be expelled from college, from a club. See COMMIT.

bank'ing (băŋk'ĭng), n. The business of a banker. The business of banking originally was that of taking money on deposit subject to check or draft, loaning money, as by discounting notes and bills, issuing drafts, and any other associated form of general dealing in money or credit. One or more of these operations if carried on with the public in general may be construed as banking.

banking doctrine or principle. See CURRENCY DOCTRINE.

bank'ing, p. a. That makes or serves as a bank or stop.

banking file. See FILE, tool. — b. pin, Horol., a pin against which a lever strikes, to limit its motion. — b. screw, an adjustable screw in the chronometer escapement, which regulates the locking movement. — b. stud. = BANKING PIN. — b. wax. = WALLING WAX.

bank money. 1. See BANCO, money. 2. a Money in the bank. b The equivalent of money as a medium of exchange constituted by checks, drafts, or bank credits other than bank notes. Cf. CURRENCY.

bank note. 1. A promissory note issued by a bank or banking company; formerly, one payable to a specified person at a fixed date (now called a bank bill); now, one payable to bearer on demand, and intended to circulate as money (often called a bank bill in the United States). In England, specif., a Bank of England note. 2. A promissory note payable at a bank. Rare.

bank paper. Bank notes (collectively); also, bankable commercial paper, as drafts or bills accepted by a bank, or notes good enough to be discounted at a bank.

bank'rupt (băŋk'rŭpt), n. [F. banqueroute, fr. It. bancarotta bankruptcy; banca bank (fr. OHG. banch bench, G. bank) + rotta broken, fr. L. rupta, fem. p. p. of rumpere to break. At Florence, it is said, the bankrupt had his bench (i. e., money table) broken. See 5th BANK; RUPTURE, n.] 1. Bankruptcy. Obs. 2. Any person whose property becomes liable to administration under the bankrupt laws. Under the first bankrupt laws (which were directed against fraudulent traders) the bankrupt was a criminal, but, with the amelioration and extension of these laws, the bankrupt is any person who is insolvent or has done any of the acts (called acts of bankruptcy) which the law provides shall entitle his creditors to have his estate administered for their benefit, such as the making of a general assignment, the making of a transfer of his property actually or constructively fraudulent, etc. In England the bankruptcy laws began with the act of 34 & 35 Henry VIII. c. 4; and the two principal acts now are 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52 (1883) and 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71 (1890). In the United States national bankruptcy acts were passed in 1800, 1841, 1867, and 1898, of which only the last with its amendments is now in force. Specific senses of bankrupt referring to these laws are: 3. A trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors. Obs. or Hist. Blackstone. 4. Loosely, a trader or any debtor who became a refugee to escape his creditors or the laws against debtors. Obs. 5. A trader or any person who becomes unable to pay his debts; an insolvent trader; an insolvent person. 6. Technically, a person who has on the petition of his creditors or on his own petition been judicially declared to be subject to have his estate administered under the bankrupt laws for the benefit of his creditors. In England, until the year 1861, none but a "trader" could be made a bankrupt; a nontrader failing to meet his liabilities being an insolvent. But this distinction was abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. In the United States in the national acts of 1841 and 1867 bankrupt was applied to others besides those engaged in trade. Cf. INSOLVENT.

bank'rupt, a. 1. Being a bankrupt or in a condition of bankruptcy; unable to pay, or legally discharged from paying, one's debts; as, a bankrupt merchant. 2. Destitute of, or wholly wanting (something once possessed, or something one should possess). 3. Relating to bankrupts or bankruptcy.

bankrupt, or bankruptcy, law, a law regulating the subject of bankruptcy. Modern bankrupt laws are of a civil nature and have the double object of protecting the creditors and of conferring on the debtor security of person and an ultimate discharge from his bona fide debts. Cf. INSOLVENT.

Ban'tu (băn'tōō), n. A member of one of the great family of Negroid tribes occupying equatorial and southern Africa (see BANTU LANGUAGES) These tribes include, as important divisions, the Kafirs, Damaras, Bechuanas, Swahilis, and many tribes whose names begin with Aba-, Ama-, Ba-, Ma-, Wa-, variants of the Bantu plural personal prefix Aba-, as in Ba-ntu, or Aba-ntu, itself a combination of this prefix with the syllable -ntu, a person. — Ban'tu, a.

Bantu languages. A family of agglutinative languages (see under AGGLUTINATIVE) constituting the most important linguistic family in Africa south of the Sahara. With exception of the Hottentot and Bushman tongues and possibly some Pygmy dialects, all African languages south of a line extending from the Bight of Biafra, through northern Kongo and the lake region, to the neighborhood of Zanzibar, are Bantu. Though the Bantu-speaking tribes vary greatly in physical type, the purest and most archaic dialects are spoken by the sturdy and energetic tribes about the great lakes and on the central Kongo, and by the warlike Zulus and Ovaherero of South Africa. The Bantu languages, which are possessed of considerable flexibility, show no trace of inflection except in the preterit formation of the verb. The syntax is effected entirely by prefixes and suffixes, infixes being unknown. There is no sexual gender, but nouns are placed in various classes, the most important being of animate and inanimate beings.

The general deduction to be drawn from a study of the Bantu languages as they exist at the present day is that at some period not much more than two thousand years ago a powerful tribe of negroes speaking the Bantu mother language, and allied physically to the negroes of the Western Nile and Southern Lake Chad basins, pushed themselves forcibly into the southern half of Africa, which at that time was probably very sparsely populated except in the northwest, east, and south. *Encyc. bap'tism (băp'tĭz'm), n. [ME. baptim, baptem, OF. baptesme, batisme, F. baptême, L. baptisma, fr. Gr. βάπτισμα, fr. βαπτίζειν to baptize. See BAPTIZE.] 1. Act or ceremony of baptizing; the application of water as a religious ceremony; esp., the application of water to a person by immersing him in it, or, as generally performed in denominations other than Baptist, by pouring or sprinkling it upon him, in the sacrament by which he is initiated into the visible church of Christ. Neither the word baptism nor baptize occurs in the English version of the Old Testament, but the words are commonly used by Hebrews for various religious ablutions, and esp. of the immersion of proselytes as a rite of admission to the faith. The mode of administering baptism in the Christian churches, with reference to which the word was first used in English, is fixed by the doctrines of the particular churches. Baptism by immersion is probably recognized as valid in all denominations, and among the Baptists is considered the only valid form.

Scripture teaches that baptism, rightly administered to those who are qualified by repentance and faith to receive it, has various beneficial results. . . . They are mainly regeneration or new birth, divine affiliation, cleansing from sin, admission to the church, union with Christ, gift of the Spirit, salvation. Dict of Bible (Hastings).

The Effects of Baptism. — It remits all sin, original and actual. . . . It remits all the penalties due for sin before God, whether temporal or eternal. . . . It imprints a "character" or indelible mark on the soul, whence it [baptism] cannot be reiterated. It makes the recipient a member of Christ and of the church, and makes it possible for him to receive the other sacraments. Catholic Dict.

Baptism. — A religious ablution signifying purification or consecration. . . Baptism is not merely for the purpose of expiating a special transgression, as is the case chiefly in the violation of the so-called Levitical laws of purity, but it is to form a part of holy living and to prepare for the attainment of a closer communion with God. . . . According to rabbinical teachings, which dominated even during the existence of the Temple, baptism, next to circumcision and sacrifice, was an absolutely necessary condition to be fulfilled by a proselyte to Judaism. Jewish Encyc.

2. Any act or experience by which one is purified, initiated, named, or the like, as in baptism by water, as, formerly, the ceremony of blessing and naming a bell or a ship; hence, any purifying or sanctifying experience or ordeal.

baptism by, or of, desire, the baptism imputed to a person who earnestly desires baptism but dies unable to obtain it. — b. for the dead, the baptism after death, or vicariously, of a person dying unbaptized; — a practice supposed to be referred to in 1 Cor. xv. 29.

The reference is clearly to something abnormal. . . We have no knowledge that this vicarious baptism was practiced by any religious body in St. Paul's day Dict. of Bible (Hastings).

— b. of blood, Eccl. Hist., the martyrdom of those who had not been baptized, which was regarded as a full substitute for literal baptism. — b. of fire. a A spiritual baptism, by the gift of the Holy Spirit. Acts ii. 3, 4. Matt. iii. 11. b Martyrdom. c Fig., any very severe ordeal or sorrowful experience.

Bap'tist (băp'tĭst), n. [OF. baptiste, L. baptista, Gr. βαπτιστής.] 1. [l. c.] One who baptizes; a baptizer; — specifically applied to John, the forerunner of Christ.

2. A member or adherent of a denomination, so called, of Christians who maintain that baptism should be administered to believers only, and almost all of whom hold that it should be by immersion, and who therefore deny the validity of infant baptism, and, generally, of the administration of baptism by sprinkling or pouring. See ANABAPTIST. The Baptists are trinitarian, congregational in polity, and for the most part Calvinistic, but with more or less freedom and moderation, in doctrine In Great Britain, where formerly, until their union in 1891, they were divided into General or Arminian (1609) and Particular or Calvinistic (1633) Baptists, they practice, mostly, open communion, while the Baptists of the United States are mostly close communionists. In the United States the denomination, which traces its origin to Roger Williams, who in 1639 organized in Providence, R I.. a Baptist church, is divided into various bodies, whose names, etc., are given in the following table.

NAME	DATE FROM	DOCTRINE, DISTINCTIVE FEATURES, etc
Regular (North)	1639	Calvinistic; close communion; form bulk of entire denomination.
" (South)	1639 (divided 1845)
" (Colored)
Six-Principle	1639	Arminian; six principles: repentance, faith, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of dead, eternal life.
Seventh-day	1671	Observe 7th day, or Saturday, as Sabbath, otherwise same as Regular.
Freewill or Free Original Freewill	1780 assoc. constituted 1729	Arminian and open communion.
General	17th century	General atonement; like Freewill Baptists
Separate		Like General Baptists; in 18th century favored the Whitefield revival movement.
United Baptist Church of Christ	Oldest associations 1808	Moderately Calvinistic. Hold mild form of Calvinism, general atonement.
Primitive, or Old School, Regular, Antimission, or Hard-shell	About 1835	Extremely Calvinistic; oppose Sunday schools, missions, theological seminaries, and church societies, as unnecessary and unscriptural.
Old Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit Predestinarian, Regular, Regular Predestinarian, or Regular Two-Seed Predestinarian Primitive		Very conservative, strongly Calvinistic, antinomian, opposed to Sunday schools, etc. Believe there are two seeds, the offspring of God, who will be saved, and the offspring of the Devil, who will be lost.

3. A member of various Oriental non-Christian or Gnostic sects practicing a form of baptism, as the Elkesaites, Hemerobaptists, and Mandæans (still in existence).

2. Barbaric in style, as architecture. De Quincey.

bar-ba'ri-an (bär-bā'rĭ-ȧn, 277), n. [See BARBAROUS.] 1. A foreigner, esp. in speech and manners. Historically the word barbarian (or the word which it translates) has been used to denote: Among the Greeks, a member of any of the nations who were strangers to the language and manners of the Greeks, including the Romans, who as late as the age of Plautus freely gave themselves the name of barbarians; among the Romans, any of the savage or hostile nations beyond the pale of the Roman empire and civilization; in medieval times, one outside of the civilization of Christianity; in the Italian Renaissance, one beyond the borders of Italy; and formerly, as used among the Moors, a native of Barbary.

Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me 1 Cor xiv 11.

2. A man in a rude, uncivilized state; sometimes, specif., one in a state between savagery and civilization.

3. A person devoid of culture; — applied esp., by way of disparagement, to one apathetic to culture. M. Arnold.

4. A native of Barbary; also, a Barbary horse. Obs.

Syn. — BARBARIAN, PHILISTINE. These words are frequently contrasted (as, "I am not denying that the majority of us are at present either Barbarians or Philistines," W. H Mallock) in the sense indicated by the quotation from Matthew Arnold which follows.

Philistine gives the notion of something particularly stiffnecked and perverse in the resistance to light and its children; and therein it specially suits our middle class . . But the aristocratic class . . if it does not pursue light, it is not that it perversely cherishes some dismal and illiberal existence in preference to light, but it is lured off from following light by . . worldly splendor, security, power, and pleasure. . I often, therefore, when I want to distinguish clearly the aristocratic class from the Philistines proper, or middle class, name the former, in my own mind, the Barbarians. M. Arnold.

bar-ba'ri-an (bär-bā'rĭ-ȧn; 277), a. [Cf. OF. barbarien.] 1. Foreign, as non-Hellenic, non-Roman, non-Christian, non-Chinese, — usually in a depreciative sense.

2. Uncivilized; rude; savage.

3. Of or belonging to Barbary. Obs.

Syn. — Uncivilized, untutored, unlettered, rude. — BARBARIAN, BARBAROUS, BARBARIC, SAVAGE. BARBARIAN expresses little more than the opposite of civilized; as, "She [Rome] saw her glories star by star expire, and up the steep, barbarian monarchs ride" (Byron) BARBAROUS is frequently used in the sense of barbarian, without further implication; as, "Civilized ages inherit the human nature which was victorious in barbarous ages" (Bagehot). It may also express the harsh and brutal side of civilized life, as, "This sensibility caused Condorcet to abandon the barbarous pleasures of the chase" (J. Morley). BARBARIC refers to the crudeness of taste and fondness for gorgeous display characteristic of uncivilized peoples; as, "something of indescribable barbaric magnificence" (W. D. Howells). SAVAGE comes into comparison with both barbarian and barbarous, occasionally denoting a lower stage of civilization than barbarian (as, "still a barbarian, but had ceased to be a savage," D. Wilson), sometimes expressing greater harshness or fierceness than barbarous as, savage cruelty. See BARBARIAN, n., FEROCIOUS.

bar-bar'ic (bär-băr'ĭk), a. [L. barbaricus foreign, barbaric, Gr. βαρβαρικός: cf. OF barbarique.] 1. Barbarian; foreign; — often with reference to the barbarian nations of the East. "Barbaric pearl and gold." Milton.

It is an impure carbonate of soda, used for making soap, glass, etc., and for bleaching purposes. b Impure soda obtained from the ashes of any seashore plant, or kelp. See COPPER BARILLA.

bar/ing (bâr/ĭng), n. 1. A making bare; an uncovering.

2. That which is removed in making bare; specif., the surface soil removed from ore or rock. In pl., Coal Mining, the small coal made in undercutting the coal seams.

bar iron. Wrought iron in the form of bars.

ba/rite (bā/rīt; bâr/ĭt), n. Min. Native sulphate of barium, $BaSO_4$, a mineral occurring in colorless, white, or yellow orthorhombic crystals (generally tabular), also in granular form, and in compact massive forms resembling marble. It has a high specific gravity (4.3–4.6), and hence is often called heavy spar. H., 2.5–3.5. It is a common mineral in metallic veins. See BARIUM SULPHATE.

ba/ri-um (bā/rĭ-ŭm; bâr/ĭ-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. βαρύς heavy.] A chemical element of the alkaline earth group, obtained in the free state as a silver-white or pale yellow malleable metal, which rapidly oxidizes in air and decomposes water. Symbol, Ba; at. wt 137.37. Barium occurs only in combination and chiefly as the sulphate (barite, barytes, or heavy spar) and the carbonate (witherite), both of which have a high specific gravity for nonmetallic minerals. The metal may be prepared by electrolysis of the fused chloride. Compounds of barium are poisonous. They color a nonluminous flame yellowish green. Chemically, barium is bivalent and is closely related to calcium and strontium.

barium chloride. Chem. A salt obtained by fusing barite with calcium chloride and by other methods, crystallizing in colorless rhombic tables, $BaCl_2{\cdot}2H_2O$. It is used as a reagent in analysis.

barium chromate. A compound, $BaCrO_4$, obtained as a powder of pure yellow color by treating some barium salt, as the chloride, with a soluble chromate in aqueous solution. It is used as a pigment under the names lemon yellow, barium yellow, baryta yellow, permanent yellow, barium chrome, and yellow ultramarine. It does not blacken with hydrogen sulphide.

barium dioxide. Chem. A peroxide obtained as a white powder by heating barium monoxide, BaO, in air or oxygen. It is used in the manufacture of oxygen (see BRIN'S PROCESS) and of hydrogen peroxide (by treatment with dilute acids).

barium hydroxide. Chem. A strong base crystallizing in tetragonal prisms, $Ba(OH)_2{\cdot}8H_2O$, obtained by caustic-izing barium carbonate or by dissolving the monoxide in water. It is used in sugar refining.

barium monoxide. Chem. A compound, BaO, obtained as a heavy grayish white powder by heating barium nitrate or carbonate, by the oxidation of metallic barium, and in other ways. It is analogous to calcium oxide or quicklime, reacting with water, with evolution of much heat, to form the alkaline hydroxide. See BRIN'S PROCESS.

barium nitrate. A colorless or white crystalline salt, $Ba(NO_3)_2$, used in certain blasting powders.

barium sulphate. Chem. A compound, $BaSO_4$, occurring in nature as barite, and formed artificially as a heavy, white, insoluble precipitate. It is used as a pigment under the names of baryta white, permanent white, blanc fixe, etc. It is inferior in covering power to white lead, but is not blackened by hydrogen sulphide. It is also used as a source of other barium compounds and as a filler in paper making.

barium sulphide. Chem. Specif., the monosulphide of barium, BaS, obtained as a white mass by the reduction of barium sulphate, and by other methods. It is used in making luminous paints. Cf. BOLOGNA PHOSPHORUS.

bark (bark), n. [Of Scand. origin; cf. Dan. & Sw. bark, Icel. borkr, LG. & G. borke.] 1. Bot The tough external covering or investment of a woody perennial stem or root. Technically, bark consists of the tissues external to the cork cambium, which on being cut off from food supplies soon die and dry up. The cracks and furrows seen in most tough barks are due to the growth of the stem. Scaly bark, as that of the plane tree, is found in trees whose peridermal layers do not form complete rings. The dark color of most barks is due to tannins. See CORTEX, CORK of weather, for ascertaining the height of any ascent, etc. The barometer was invented by Torricelli at Florence about 1643. It is made in its simplest form (cup barometer, cistern barometer) by filling a graduated glass tube about 34 inches long with mercury and inverting it in a cup containing mercury. The column of mercury in the tube descends until balanced by the weight of the atmosphere, and its rise or fall under varying conditions is a measure of the atmospheric pressure. At the sea level its ordinary height is about 30 inches (760 millimeters). Fortin's barometer (fôr'tăNz'), used for scientific purposes, is a form of cup barometer having an adjustable cistern. The marine, mountain, siphon, and wheel barometers are also mercurial, but the aneroid barometer is based on a different principle. See under MARINE, etc.; also see SYMPIESOMETER.

2. The rind or husk of fruits, grains, or nuts. Obs.

3. Outer covering, as of an elephant's trunk; specif., the skin (of man or beast) Dial. or Colloq.

barometric error, Horol., a very small error in the time of a clock caused by changes in the density of the atmosphere. — b. gradient, Meteor., the rate of fall in atmospheric pressure between two stations; the slope of an isobaric surface. In England and America it is usually expressed in hundredths of an inch of mercury for one degree (sometimes one quarter of a degree) of 60 nautical miles; thus, a barometric gradient of 10 indicates a difference of reading of $\frac{10}{100}$ inch on the barometer for two places one degree (or $\frac{1}{4}$ degree) apart. On the Continent the millimeter is used instead of the hundredth of an inch. Increasing steepness of gradient is accompanied by increasing force of wind; a gradient of 6 represents a strong breeze, of 10, a stiff gale. — b. pressure, the pressure of the atmosphere, usually expressed in terms of the height of a column of mercury. See BAROMETER. — b. tide, Meteor., a regular daily fluctuation in the barometric pressure. — b. wave, Meteor., a progressive change of atmospheric pressure due neither to diurnal variation nor to the passage of a depression.

Dan. aften-bakke (aften evening), Sw. natt-backa (natt night), Icel. leđ-blaka (leđr leather), Icel. blaka to flutter] Any one of the numerous flying mammals constituting the order Chiroptera. The bats are the only mammals capable of true flight. Their fore limbs are modified to form wings, having the metacarpals and finger bones (except those of the thumb) greatly elongated. These support, like the ribs of an umbrella, a cutaneous membrane, which also extends a little in front of the arm and embraces the hind limbs except the feet, and sometimes the whole length of the tail. The thumb and toes have claws by which the animal suspends itself (often head downward) when at rest. Bats are nocturnal in habit, and are among the most perfectly aërial of all animals, locomotion other than by flight being comparatively difficult for them. They are most abundant and attain the largest size in warm countries. In colder regions they hibernate. Some are frugivorous, as the flying foxes (which see); the majority are insectivorous; a few suck the blood of other mammals. The ancestry of the bats is unknown; the earliest remains are found in the Eocene. See CHIROPTERA, also VAMPIRE, Illust.

be (bē), v. i.; pret. WAS (wŏz); p. p. BEEN (see BEEN, in vocabulary); p. pr. & vb. n. BE'ING. [ME. been, beon, AS. bēon to be, biom I am, akin to OHG. bim, pim, G. bin, I am, Gael. & Ir. bu was, W. bod to be, Lith. bu-ti, O. Slav. by-ti, to be, L. fu-i I have been, fu-turus about to be, fo-re to be about to be (and perh. to fieri to become), Gr. φῦναι to be born, to be, Skr. bhū to be. Cf. FUTURE, PHYSIC.] This verb, which, with its conjugational forms, is often called the substantive verb, is defective, and the parts lacking are supplied by verbs from other roots, those of is, was. Its various forms in the two inflectional moods are thus as follows: Indicative present, sing., 1st person, am; 2d, art, [you] are; 3d, is. Pl., 1st, 2d, and 3d persons, are; formerly also be: "They that be with us are more than they that be with them." 2 Kings vi. 16. In "the powers that be" and in archaic and dial. usage this pl. be still survives. Preterit, sing., 1st and 3d persons, was; 2d, wast, [you — originally, thou] were; in Shakespeare and later writers also wert: "Bird thou never wert" Shelley. Pl., 1st, 2d, and 3d persons, were. Subjunctive present, sing. and pl., 1st, 2d, and 3d persons, be. "But if it be a question of words and names" (Acts xviii. 15); 2d sing. also beest, esp. in 16th and 17th centuries: "If thou beest he." Milton. The indicative forms is and are, however, with if, are now more commonly used. Preterit, sing. and pl., 1st, 2d, and 3d persons, were (in the 17th and 18th centuries also was in sing., sometimes in pl.); 2d sing. also wert. Although subjunctive forms are now generally less used, were is obligatory in dependent clauses to predicate what is supposed to be contrary to fact, esp. in inverted clauses of condition; as, "I would n't, if I were you." "She wishes she were home." "Were he my brother, he should not escape."

☞ In the archaic phrase I (he, etc.) were better (or best), the pronoun takes the place of an earlier dative, me, etc., the sense being it were better for me, now usually expressed I had better. (See HAVE.)

☞ In certain phrases of time, as Sunday week, the earlier form was Sunday was a week, signifying a date a week before the Sunday designated. See COME, v. i., Note.

1. To hold or obtain as true with respect to some condition, thing, or quality; to have or enter into a real relation with a specified object or idea.

The quality of mercy is not strained. Shak

In this broadest use, the verb to be serves as the simplest expression of the act of relating one term or idea to another. So taken it signifies: (1) that, within the range of thought assumed by any given discourse, the ideas related have real meaning, and (2) that they enter into a real relationship with one another. In a nonsensical proposition, as, "happiness is square," the verb is meaningless, because there is no thinkable relation which the verb can express. From this general necessity that the relationship affirmed be true (or thinkable as true) arises (3) the significance of be whereby it is equivalent to exist.

Be does not, however, mean exist, always in the same sense. The RELATION expressed may be either real or ideal, and of any of various types; as, for example: the relation of subject and attribute, as, gold is yellow; of name to what is named; as, this is John; of equivalence or identity; as, 2 and 2 are four; to be good is to be happy; etc. When the kind of existence affirmed is taken as real (cf. defs. 2, 3, and 4) its reality is usually implicitly defined by the context. The EXISTENCE referred to may be hypothetical, as in the phrases: so be, meaning if it be so; be it that, meaning if it be the case, or fact, that; or it may be relative, as in being that, meaning since it is so that; or it may be wholly indeterminate, as in howsoever it be. In every case the relationship expressed or referred to is tacitly recognized as possible. (Cf. COPULA, UNIVERSE OF DISCOURSE.)

In the cases where to be is used as an AUXILIARY with participles and infinitives, as limited or specified by the action of these verbal forms, it still carries its threefold significance (viz., real meaning of the terms, real relationship, and existence in the sense taken). With the infinitive, it has in certain uses idiomatically acquired added significances, such as: (1) necessity or obligation; as, I am to thank you for this; it is to seek; it is to be returned; we are to pay just debts (cf. HAVE, 4); (2) contingent futurity; as, they were to have come; are you to go? the battle is yet to fight, (3) propriety or fitness; as, they are to be depended upon. The verb be is regularly used in forming the PASSIVE VOICE of other verbs; as, John has been struck by James. With the present participle it enters into the formation of the DEFINITE TENSES, both active and passive; as, they are hastening; the house is building; the child is being trained. It is also USED WITH THE PAST PARTICIPLES of many intransitive verbs, as those of motion and position, to express a state of the subject; as, "Ye have come too late — but ye are come." "The minstrel boy to the war is gone." But have is now more commonly used as the auxiliary, though expressing a sense of completed action rather than of resulting state. Have, or had, been, followed by to or a noun denoting movement, is used with a like distinction for have or had gone; as, I have been to Paris; he had been the rounds; have you been to Franchard?

2. To exist; to partake of reality; to have place as a fact among facts; specif., to exist as a living being; to live.
To be contents his natural desire. Pope

3. To exist with reference to an event, or in respect to time; specif.: a To come to pass; to come into existence; to happen; as, the bride to be. b To continue in existence; to last, as, this state of affairs cannot be forever.

4. To exist with reference to a certain place or condition; to hold a relation determined by place or condition; as, to be here; to be at ease; were you at the station? "Where are the snows of yester-year?" D. G. Rossetti (Villon).

5. To signify; to mean; — either as representing or symbolizing, or as amounting or answering to, as implying or necessitating; as, it was almost the death of me, often, in an indefinite query, to signify; as, what is it to you?
The field is the world Matt XIII. 38.
The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches. Rev I. 20
Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Lam. I 12.

6. To belong or pertain; to befall; — usually with to or unto; as, Woe be unto you! Woe is me! Cf. WORTH, v. i.

7. To stand good for expense, in a treat or the like. Obs. or Dial.

Syn. — BE, EXIST, SUBSIST. BE (here compared in its absolute use only) applies to whatever has any place in the realm of fact; EXIST, to that which has substantive or actual being; SUBSIST, to that which continues to exist; as, "Whatever is, is right" (Pope); "Our relation . . . exists — it 's a reality" (H. James); "Firm we subsist, yet possibly to swerve" (Milton). Be, as here compared, carries no implication beyond the possession of reality; as, "To be, contents his natural desire" (Pope). With exist are often associated certain accompaniments or limitations of being, in time, place, or circumstances; as, the danger exists only in imagination, vast quantities of water exist as vapor. Subsist (see LIVING) frequently connotes dependence, either in mode or duration of existence; as, "The unexempt condition by which all mortal frailty must subsist" (Milton); "Those secret distributions without which the body cannot subsist in its vigor" (Addison). Exist, although sometimes seemingly a mere copula (as, there exists no reason for alarm), always retains some implication of substantive being or actuality.

☞ In the passive form of this verb, the best modern usage restricts the past participle born to the sense of given birth to, when not followed by by (the mother). In the active form, borne alone is used as the past participle

Syn.—Uphold, support, sustain, maintain; undergo, suffer, tolerate, abide, put up with, submit to.—BEAR, ENDURE, STAND, BROOK agree in the idea of sustaining something trying or painful. BEAR may refer to either small or great, temporary or permanent, discomforts or ills; as, water as hot as one can bear it; to bear the brunt of battle, "the bearing well of all calamities" (Milton). ENDURE refers chiefly to great or lasting hardships or evils, borne without yielding or giving in; as, "to endure exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain" (Milton); "If they could not bring us to enjoy life, they would at least teach us to endure it" (Goldsmith). STAND (frequently in negative constructions) is more colloquial, and implies bearing or putting up with something without flinching; as, he cannot stand teasing. "She did not mind death, but she could not stand pinching" (Barham). BROOK, now rather literary and in negative constructions only, implies a certain self-assertion against insult, opposition, limitation, or restraint; as, "He is fierce, and cannot brook hard language" (Shak.); "Restraint she will not brook" (Milton). Bear, endure, and stand (usually in negative clauses) have also the sense of suffer, tolerate (see ALLOW); as, I cannot bear him, endure him, stand him. In such negative uses, bear commonly implies personal dislike; endure, intolerance; stand, impatience or distaste. See PATIENCE.

Syn. — Adorn, grace, ornament, decorate, deck.

beau'ty (bū'tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [ME. beaute, beute, OF. beauté, beuté, beité, F. beauté, fr. an assumed LL. bellitas, fr. L. bellus pretty. Cf. BELLE.] 1. An assemblage of graces or properties, or some one of them, satisfying the eye, the ear, the intellect, the æsthetic faculty, or the moral sense; also, the abstract quality characteristic of such properties, the beautiful. In æsthetics, beauty broadly comprises the sublime, tragic, comic, etc., as well as the sensuous qualities which characterize beauty in the narrower sense. Historically, beauty has been interpreted: by Socrates, as being essentially moral and useful; by Plato, as characterized by measure and symmetry and as constituted by the presence of the ideal beautiful; by Plotinus, as being the supremacy of the higher over the lower, of form over matter; by Cicero, as distinguished from the useful, and as comprising as distinct types dignity and charm or grace; by the Scholastics, as a relation to a mind perceiving proportion, and resting in its contemplation. In modern thought there have been three classes of interpretation; beauty has been conceived: (1) as due to some intrinsic characteristic of things themselves; for example, harmony in diversity; (2) as an objectification of the mind's idealizations; for example, as pleasure objectified; (3) as due to the character of bodily and mental reactions, as to the zest of the perceptive activity or to liveliness of associations aroused; and often as connected with some biological benefit, for example, sexual selection, play activities, etc. CF. SUBLIME.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of color and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

The old definition of beauty, in the Roman school, was, "multitude in unity," and there is no doubt that such is the principle of beauty. Coleridge.

2. A particular grace, feature, ornament, or excellence; anything beautiful; as, the beauties of nature.
